ENGLISH NEUTRALITY.

Count Bernstorff's Reply to Earl Granville—Partial Neutrality of the British Government Exposed—Shipments and Manufacture of Arms for France—A British Change of Ground.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—BERNSTORFF, the Prussian Ambassador at London, addressed yesterday an exhaustive reply to Lord GRANVILLE on the subject of British neutrality, which will be published to-morrow. He says the hopes of peace delayed an answer to GRANVILLE's letter of 15th September, as the Prussian Minister much preferred to discontinue the controversy. These hopes having disappeared, BERNSTORFF reviews, from the commencement, all the correspondence criticising GRANVILLE's publication of his reply, without allowing him time to correct certain evident misconceptions, and before the correspondence could be considered as closed.

BRITISH CHANGE OF GROUND.

He shows conclusively, when the attention of GRANVILLE was first called to the open and clandestine consignments of arms and ammunition to France, that no pretense was made by Her Majesty's Government that they regarded the traffic as contraband of war, or incompatible with neutrality, or that they could interfere. On the contrary, the Prussian Embassy was invited to give proofs of the illegitimate traffic, that he might thereupon consider. The agents of the North German Confederation in the United Kingdom with great labor collected the evidence, the position of GRANVILLE being that it was impossible to interfere unless positive proofs were adduced that consignments had really taken place. When this condition was fulfilled, and the proofs laid before GRANVILLE, various delays took place and quibbles were made, until finally Her Majesty's Government shifted its ground and declared that the traffic in arms which had been quite openly carried on was legitimate, and that the Customs authorities had no power to stop it.

CHARACTER OF THE NEUTRALITY.

BERNSTORFF says he never asked neutrality in favor of Germany and to the detriment of France. He only wished a return from the neutrality whereby one party was benefited, to strict, and really impartial neutrality. BERNSTORFF is unable to admit that compatible with strict neutrality the French agents are permitted to buy in this country, under the eyes and cognisance of the Government, thousands of breech-loaders, revolvers, and the required ammunition, in order to arm the French, and make the formation of a French corps possible, after the regular armies of France have been defeated and surrounded.

SHIPMENT AND MANUFACTURE OF ARMS.

According to information in the hands of the Embassy, since the memorandum of the 20th of September, 160,000 fire-arms have been stripped from England to France. A number of manufacturers, especially in Birmingham and London, are working day and night for the French agents and their men of straw. The Embassy is in possession of authenticated copies of contracts between the French Government and the English contractors, in the event of war. Quite recently, was put in our possession an official message from the present French Minister of was dated on the 18th September, addressed to an officer of the French embassy in London, mentioning that 25,000 Snyder rifles were expected to be dispatched from England wherein reference was made to payment to be made out of the funds at the disposal of the French Chargé d'Affaires for the purchase of arms. General authentic proof is also in his possession that the export of arms and ammunition to France was regularly organized in British ports.

POWER TO STOP THE TRADE.

BERNSTORFF proceeds to show that the Government has power, under existing law, to prevent the exportation of contraband of of war, and only needs an order of the Cabinet to put this power in force. This was done in 1848, during the Danish-German complications, when the Custom-house officers were ordered to prevent the exportation of arms and war-like stores, intended to be used against the Danish Government. On the other hand when the Government instructed the customs officers, on the 8th of September, to ascertain what arms and ammunition were being shipped to France, the order read: "You are not in any case to delay the shipment longer than is sufficient to obtain particulars of the nature and quantity of arms."

INTERNATIONAL VS. MUNICIPAL LAW.

After reviewing other points of Granville, the letter of BERNSTORFF says: "I am of the opinion that the right of belligerent powers to complain of the attitude of a neutral State, rests not so much on accidental municipal laws, as on International law, with which it is the duty of every Government to bring municipal laws into harmony. Germany has already proved, in three wars, her adherence to the principle aimed at by the whole commercial world, the security of private property at sea a principle, the adoption of which proved unattainable until the Congress of Paris in 1856. Germany, therefore, has the more reason to expect that other powers should not unlikely violate neutrality rights to her detriment and their own advantage." He concludes his forcible justification of Germany's complaint as to the unrestricted export of arms by saying that the enemy can only be overcome by great sacrifices, and are furnished means of prolonging the war, the only result of which can be to increase the sacrifices and bloodshed of both.

Says this most eloquent defender of his position: "The British Government will not succeed in the eyes of Germany in bringing such a neutrality policy into harmony with the professions of humanity, and wishes for peace put forth by England. As for the hope expressed by your Excellency that the German people in a cooler moment will judge less severely of the attitude of the Government of Great Britain, than now, in the heat of action, and regret that, in consequence of Your Excellency's note of the 15th ultimo, and the added knowledge that the enemy is being daily equipped by British arms, I cannot share it.

FROM PARIS DIRECT.

Successful Voyage of Two Americans in a Balloon—Meeting the Gambetta of the Provinces—M. Gambetta's Journey—Extracts from Late Paris Journals.

TOURS, Oct. 9.—CHARLES W. MAY, of Paris, formerly of New-York, and WM. W. REYNOLDS, of New-York, furnish the following account of their trip in a balloon from Paris, which place they left at the same time with M. GAMBETTA, both balloons having risen at 11 o'clock on Friday morning.

AVOIDING THE PRUSSIANS.

When about 500 yards up, the wind died away, the balloon remaining stationary over the Prussian camp. Musketry was fired at the balloon, as were also cannon, the party in the balloon distinctly hearing the whiz of the balls. The Prussians used fuses, endeavoring thereby to set fire to the balloon. Ballast was thrown out of the balloon, and it moved gently away. During the trip, which lasted five hours, several attempts were made to land, but the presence of the Prussians in the vicinity compelled the party to throw out ballast and rise again each time. They finally landed at Roye, in the Department of the Somme, where they were received warmly by the people, on account of their being Americans.

GAMBETTA'S JOURNEY.

They lost sight of the Gambetta balloon at about 3 o'clock on Friday. It landed at Mont Didier, and they were joined by M. GAMBETTA at Amiens, whence they continued their journey by special train with him to Tours. Along the route M. GAMBETTA was enthusiastically welcomed by the people. The balloons were to have left Paris two days sooner, but were prevented by the lack of wind. The voyage of M. GAMBETTA from Paris was full of adventure. The balloon came down to the ground just outside the walls of the city; threw out ballast and rose, passing slowly over the Prussian lines, came down again near Creil: saw the Prussians, and were forced to throw out ballast, traveling-sacks, and shawls; rose slowly again, a shot just grazing the hair of GAMBETTA. Near Mont Didier, the balloon came down among trees, and was torn. M. GAMBETTA and party got a conveyance and went to Amiens. Just the other side of the woods in which they landed were the Prussians. [Creil is situated about twenty miles north of Paris, and Mont Didier is within twenty-one miles of Amiens.]

AFFAIRS IN THE CITY.

Messrs. MAY and REYNOLDS report that the Parisians are determined on the defense of the city, which was quiet and orderly. The voyagers add that it is impossible for the Prussians to capture Paris except through famine. The appearance of Paris is much as usual. The shops are opened daily, but are closed earlier than before the siege as are also the cafés. The Garde National are constantly drilling, and full of desire to fight to the last. LOUIS BLANC and another other persons of distinction, came to see M. GAMBETTA leave.

PARIS JOURNALS.

The Americans in Paris also bade farewell to Messrs. MAY and REYNOLDS. Their balloon was private property, and was conducted by M. DE REVILLOUD, a French marine officer, whose coolness and skill is much lauded. There were pigeons in the balloon which have been let loose to return to Paris. The Americans' balloon brought Paris journals to Oct. 7, which notice the intended departure on that day of the two balloons.

THE DEFENSES.

The Liberte calls the attention of the Government to the fact that an American general, asserted to be in Paris, means to defeat the Prussians and cut off their supplies, and says that such a General as SHERIDAN, with 30,000 cavalry, could easily accomplish this. An official military report of the 6th of October shows that all is quiet around Paris, save toward the Park of St. Cloud, where the cannons of Mount Valerian have caused the Prussians considerable loss. Arrangements have been made to erect a shelter along the ramparts for the National Guard watching at night. Near St. Denis, Gen. BELLEMARE has just caused the occupation, in sufficient force, of a semi-circular intrenched camp, rendering that side of the city impregnable.

THE DEFRONDED DIPLOMATISTS.

The diplomats still remaining in Paris met at the Papal Nuncio's to consider the condition they are placed in by the refusal of Count BISMARCK to permit them to send out couriers unless their dispatches are opened, to which the diplomats unanimously refused to accede. This is to be signified to Count BISMARCK, and if he persist, the diplomats will be forced to suspend all communication with their respective Governments. Mr. MAY saw Mr. WASHBURNE, who was well.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PAPERS.

The Journal Officiel publishes the answers of all the Prefects to the circular issued by the Minister of the Interior at the date of the declaration of war. These dispatches prove, contrary to the assertions made at the time, that the sentiment of the people was vastly in favor of peace. More pamphlets containing Imperial correspondence have been published. Some of it is of a very scandalous nature. On the 5th of October there was much cannonading around Paris. The enemy, under the cover of a thick fog, endeavored to make movements, but were defeated by the sharp watch kept by the forts. The enemy were dislodged from Bougival and other villages by shells. On the other side of the city skirmishes took place, but no serious engagement. The Gaulois says several companies of France-Tireurs have mitrailleuses. The Pays says there are still many spies in Paris, who manage to convey information to the enemy. The Gaulois says that in nearly all parts of Paris good water is obtained by sinking wells, as is proved by experiments just made. Economical measures are now closely studied in Paris. There are fewer gas-lamps in streets and shops. Extreme care is taken not to waste food. The poor classes receive, by order of the authorities, for two sous, a large bowl of soup and a piece of bread. When it is evident that parties are very poor, they are fed gratis. Much horse flesh is eaten. The Figaro complains that while Paris is undergoing siege the inhabitants of Versailles treat the Prussians ever courteously, and says surely this is not true. The ladies who flock to hear the Prussian bands play must be women of ill-repute. The mitrailleuses now made are not such as were first used, of whose construction the Emperor has the secret. They now make the Mentigny. France-Tireurs have been organized in Paris. Many attempts had been unsuccessfully made by special correspondents to leave Paris or send out dispatches.

German Preparations for Attack—The French Army.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—A special correspondent at the Prussian head-quarters says: You may rest assured that the siege of Paris will not be delayed an hour longer than is necessary to bring up the guns to make the attack. Adecisive headway has recently been made. The French forces gathering in the unoccupied portions of France are not feared. However, they can make dangerous progress, but the new army on its way from Germany to Strasbourg will crush out such organizations.

GAMBETTA ON THE SITUATION.

Proclamation to the Departments—A Fight to the End Advised—A Stirring Appeal.

TOURS, Oct. 9.—M. GAMBETTA issues a proclamation to the people of the Departments. After reviewing the position at Paris, and showing the preparations made by the Government for months to maintain themselves, he says:

"The situation imposes upon us great duties. First of all, it is for you to cease to be diverted by any preoccupation which may not be the war, a combat a outrance. The second is, until peace comes, to accept fraternally the authority of the Republic, a power proceeding from necessity and right, and a power which would not exist a moment were it exercised for the profit of any ambition. There is now but one passion and but one thought to rescue France from the abyss into which monarchy has plunged her. This makes the Republic which has been well founded, and which affords a shelter to the conspirators and reactionists. So, therefore, I have a command for you. Abandoning all other affairs, and without taking account of the difficulties and the obstacles which are to be overcome, to co-operate with all your unrestrained energies in remedying the evils of the situation.

The time is short in which to supply to the active force all it has lost by delay. The men are not wanting. This delay is to which has wrought defeat. Now come resolution and decision, and it is in the execution of these projects that the Republic makes an appeal to the co-operation of all. This Government takes upon itself the duty of utilising all your courage, of employing all your capacity. It is its tradition to arm our young leaders, while we do this the heavens will cease to favor our adversaries. The rains of autumn will come, and lingering around the capital, the Prussians, far from their homes, alarmed, harassed, and pursued by our aroused population, will be decimated by our arms.

By fact and by nature it is not possible that the genius of France will be clouded forever; that the great nation will allow itself to take a place under the domination of 500,000 men.

Let us then rise up en masse, and let us die rather than submit disgracefully to dismemberment. Through all our disasters, and under the stroke of ill-fortune, there remains for us the sentiment of the unity of France, and the indivisibility of the Republic. Paris asserts most gloriously again that immortal motto which calls again upon all France: "Vive la Nation. Vive la Republique, une et indivisible."

GARIBALDI

The Veteran at Tours—Enthusiasm of the France-Tireurs—His Reception at Marseilles.

TOURS, Oct. 9.—GARIBALDI arrived here before he was expected. An officer offered to escort him with his troops, but GARIBALDI replied he was not accustomed to an escort. He added that he hoped to meet that officer again on the field of battle, helping to drive the enemy from the Republic. GARIBALDI then went to the Prefecture, where, though much fatigued, he received the members of the Government and the Prefect. At that moment a battalion of France-Tireurs, loudly cheering, entered the yard of the Prefecture, demanding that GARIBALDI review them, and shouting "Vive GARIBALDI!" "Vive la Republique," and requested M. GLAIS-BIZOIN to give GARIBALDI an embrace for the battalion. M. CREMIEUX delivered a patriotic discourse. GARIBALDI made a brief speech to them, in which he said, "We shall meet again on the battle-field to rid France of the invader." The crowd then separated, shouting for GARIBALDI and the Republic.

THE ITALIAN PATRIOT AT MARSEILLES.

MARSEILLES, Oct. 8.—GARIBALDI excited a great sensation here. Enormous crowds accompanied him to the depot.

OPERATIONS IN THE NORTH.

The Prussians Repulsed at St. Quentin—A Brave Prefect Rouses the People to the Defense of the Town—Robberies by German Soldiers.

HAVRE, Oct. 8, via TOURS, Oct. 9.—Twelve hundred Prussians have been repulsed from St. Quentin by the National Guard. The Prussians were forced to fall back upon Ribemont. [St. Quentin is situated about twenty miles due north of Soissons, on the railroad running north from Paris into Belgium. The city is not fortified.]

ADDITIONAL DETAILS.

LILLE, via LONDON, Oct. 9.—St. Quentin is now open, the townspeople having gallantly withstood an attack by 1,200 Prussians. The Prefect, ANATOLE LAFARGE, bade the people rise en masse and defend the place. He then assembled the laborers, and armed them from the gunsmith-shops, and marched outside of the city. Barricades were raised near the canal, which were held for five hours, against the incessant attacks of the Prussians, who retired, with severe loss, to Ribemont. The townsmen also suffered considerably, and the Prefect was wounded. [Ribemont is on the Disc River, and lies about seven miles to the south-east of St. Quentin.]

GERMAN VANDALISM.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—Advices from Compiegne say the town has been stripped by the Prussians—even the curtains to houses thereat have been carried away.

CO-OPERATION WITH OUTERS FORCES.

TOURS, Oct. 9.—It is understood that rigorous measures are to be enforced, enabling an offensive movement for the relief of Paris. It is reported the besieged are prepared to second such a movement. Dispatches from various quarters show there have been more successful skirmishes by France-Tireurs with the enemy.

Bazaine Co-operating with the Tours Government—The Army of Lyons Moving Northward.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—Your special from Boulogne sends the highly-important information that there is no longer any possibility of doubting that Marshal BAZAINE is cordially co-operating with the Government at Tours and with Gen. TROCHU at Paris. The Army of Lyons has also taken the field, and is advancing by Nancy to the relief of Marshal BAZAINE, and threatening with him the rear and the line of communications of the German Army.

MOVEMENTS IN THE EAST.

A Prussian Success at Hambervillers—Exhilaration of the Baden Troops.

CARLSRUHE, Oct. 8.—The following has been received by the Duke of BADEN. We won an engagement near Streny on Saturday with one French corps of the line, and the Mobiles. The battle lasted from 9½ A. M. to 4 P. M., when the French were routed and fled toward Hambervillers. The Badeners report the French force to have been double theirs, numbering 14,000 men, with batteries, under Gen. PETIEVIN. The Bois des Jumeles were carried by the Germans with the bayonet. Three French charges were repulsed. The German loss was 20 officers and 410 men killed and wounded. The enemy's loss was thrice greater. The Germans took 60 officers and 600 unwounded prisoners, and bivouacked on the field. It was a glorious day for the Badeners.

ANOTHER SUCCESS.

VERSAILLES, Oct. 8, via BERLIN.—There is nothing new from Paris. Advices from Deopenfields state that a Baden brigade on Thursday defeated the French General, DUPRE, commanding a force of regulars and large masses of riflemen. DUPRE was wounded, and his army dispersed.

DEFENSES OF BELFORT.

TOULOUSE, Oct. 8.—The Mobiles and artillery of the Department of Haut Garonne have started for Belfort.

ORLEANS.

Movements Between Orleans and the Capital—A French Success at Versailles—Germans Reconnoitering at Pithiviers and Etampes.

VOVES, Oct. 8.—This morning, at 5 o'clock, the France Tireurs attacked two squadrons of hussars and two companies of Bavarians, who were barricaded in the streets. After a sharp combat the enemy retreated. We took sixty-seven prisoners and ninety-four horses and many killed and wounded. Our loss was trifling. [Voves is situated near the railway between Paris and Tours, about eight miles south-east of Chartres and sixteen north of Orleans.]

PITHIVIERS AND ETAMPES.

CHARTRES, Oct. 8.—The Prussians are at Droux in force. Prussian scouts were seen near Pithiviers on Saturday, where the French waited an attack.

MALESHERBES, Oct. 8.—The Prussians are massed near Etampes. On Friday several columns passed through Farid St. Croix to Etampes.

THE NEW GOVERNMENT.

Reported Conflict of Authority with the Paris Committee—Postponement of the Elections—Measures of Defense of the Nation.

VERSAILLES, Oct. 8.—A proclamation of the Paris Government, dropped by a balloon and found by the Germans, is as follows:

"The Paris Government of National Defense regard the resolution of the Tours Government as the result of an error. It is opposed to the decree of the Government of National Defense, which alone is binding. The adjournment of the elections will be maintained until they are possible throughout the Republic."

Signed Oct. 1, 1870,

Garnier Pages, Jules Favre, Gen. Trochu, E. Picard, Jules Simon, E. Arago, Jules Ferry, Leon Gambetta, Henri Rochefort.

Neutral Efforts at Mediation—Bonapartist Intrigues in Belgium—Condition of Marshal McMahon—American Volunteers—Aid from India.

MADRID, Oct. 9.—Minister SAGASTA told the Cortes yesterday that the Government had represented to England and Russia the desirability of mediation, but both declined interference. England, however, was willing to facilitate an interview between Count BISMARCK and M. FAVRE. Spain then applied to Count BISMARCK, and met with a refusal.

BRUSSELS, Oct. 9.—The Independance Belge denounces the Bonapartists in Belgium, as plotting for the recovery of power, and demands the formal abrogation of the law sheltering aliens, which is thus openly violated. The armies of observation have been disbanded.

UNITED ITALY.

The Capture of Rome—Tranquillity of the Capital—The Great Change in the City—Treatment of the Pope—Repentance of the People—The New Roman Life.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Wednesday, Sept. 21, 1870.

I followed the tail of the army into Rome, coming from the side of Monte Rotondo and the bridge of Salara. Gen. CADORNA, the commander-in-chief, day before yesterday, resolved by an energetic stroke, to put an end to a situation which had been too many days protracted. The good offices of the Count D'ARNIM, the representative of the North German Confederation, to bring about a concession of the place by the Pope's troops, were ineffectual, and it was well understood that in any case resistance would be opposed. Upward sixty thousand troops of the Italian Army were waiting outside the walls, and within about one-fifth that number were determined to make a stand in spite of the counsels of the civil authority. It has been said that the temporal power was taken away from the Pope by his own agents by his desertion.

THE ATTACK ON ROME.

Soon after daylight, yesterday morning, the attack began, and the curtain of wall between the Salara and Pia gates, near the Villa Albani, was the point selected at which an opening was to be made. For three or four hours a brisk cannonading was kept up, and from the clouds of dust and débris, mingling with the cannon smoke, it was soon seen that the great masses of brick and lime, put together by the Romans fifteen centuries ago, were giving way. From the Porta Pia and the Porta Salara there was a lively play of artillery, and the shot went whistling down the narrow roads, leaving marks of destructive effect upon the roofs and walls of villas, which will be new objects for the searching curiosity of visitors to Rome the coming Winter. At the very time that the rattle and crash was at its height here, Gen. ANGIOLETTA's division was pounding at the gates on the side of St. John Lateran, and Gen. BIXIO was at work on the side of the Janiculum Hill, at the Porta San Pancrazio, by which the French entered twenty or more years ago. Before 10 o'clock a wide breach had been made near the Pia gate, through which a column rushed with true military fury. The struggle went on for a little while within, and the gate was got possession of.

THE ITALIANS IN POSSESSION.

By 10 o'clock, white flags were seen flying from the top of St. Peter's and from the towers of other churches, and firing at once ceased along the whole line, Rome was in possession of the Italian forces, and the most important act accomplished. The pontifical troops rushed pell-mell across the bridge of St. Angelo into the Leonine city, under the cover of the Vatican and the sepulchre fortress of Hadrian, where they still remain.

TRACES AND RESULT OF THE STRUGGLE.

More traces are left by this struggle of a few hours than were seen after the French siege of several weeks in 1849. The Porta Pia, restored a few years ago, is terribly battered, the columns mutilated and the statues knocked to pieces. Along the wall, for a mile or two, saps and indentations are seen, the grounds of villas trampled, and the walls riddled with shot. These damages, and a few score of wounded and killed, is the small price paid for so great a result.

The Capitol has been taken possession of, and a Provisional Junta proclaimed. As soon as possible a municipal Government will be got into working order. The Pope is still in the Vatican, surrounded by his friends, all evidently in a state of bewilderment. Their old plans are upset, and they are puzzled to know what to do next. The names of PIUS IX. and VICTOR EMMANUEL are associated in the vivas of the people. This is according to the understood plan. Every effort will be made to calm and assure the Pontiff, and reconcile him to the situation. We must wait to see what effect, for the prospect of winning him is dubious. In the Leonine City he will be left undisturbed to arrive at his conclusions. The only weapons now left to him are anathemas, and these are used with little effect.

CONDITION OF THE CITY.

Rome is a vast barracks. The entrance of such a body of troops in a single day, and the difficulty of finding immediate accommodations for such masses of stores and military material, horses, men, guns, and the endless train of which an army is made up, makes necessary considerable activity of diligent quest. But there is no confusion; for military discipline is a model of method, and the good conduct of Italian soldiers at this time receives much praise. The men are bivouacking in the squares, under their guns and horses' bellies, and wherever a little temporary shelter is found. But they will all soon be well enough lodged; for there is to end in Rome of vast old convents and other piles, which will have to do quite other service than that to which they have been put in the past. As for sentinelship of all degrees, masks, guns, military students, and the thousands wearing the livery of the Church, not one is to be seen in the streets. Rome has for a moment lost one of its characteristic features. Fear has caused nearly all them to hide themselves, and it will take some time for confidence to be restored, and for the priests to be persuaded that the Italian Government will extend its protection to all. I perceive, by talking with the soldiers and the men of the new Police, that the softest voice and the gentlest hand will be used; but order will be preserved, and the security of all made sure, at whatever cost. For the cruelty of past rule, a merciful system is to be substituted.

DEMONSTRATIONS OF JOY.

This evening Rome is running wild with joy. The town is bright with one of those pretty illuminations which we have so many times seen on occasions of Papal fêtes. The Corso and the adjacent streets are filled with animated crowds bearing from place to place the Italian flag, with bands of music, and shouts for United Italy, the King, and Rome the Capital. Thousands have bound on to their hats the word "SI," printed in large letters, as an affirmation in anticipation of the coming proscito. The shops have been nearly all shut for two days, and nothing has been or can be thought of except the immense event which is to change the whole political and moral character of this ancient seat of influence. Thousands of flags are hanging from the house fronts, and Rome wears an air of triumph. The political prisoners have been liberated, and their gratitude finds expression in shouts a hundred times repeated. Except among those to whom the event has brought a total disaster, the feeling of satisfaction is general and extreme, and hope has come at last to people that have long waited for this great deliverance. The contents finds expression in street as well as in great acts and ways. The sentinel who took me from the camp to my inn, when asked, after the work was done, to drink his fee, told me to fix it according to my own wishes. Such as he seems to be a step toward the millennium. I never saw so many American flags displayed at one time in any city in Europe as are now hanging from the windows of the houses here. I think it would not be difficult to count as many as fifty waving in different parts of the Piazza de Spagna quarter. There are nearly or quite as many English flags, but as they are dread emblem they are less conspicuous. Late events in our history have caused a vast multiplication of "copies" of the national ensign. Abroad as well as at home it has become a common article in the wardrobe of the traveler.

NEWS ON THE OUTSIDE.

Railway communication with Rome, which has been broken for the last ten days, is re-established, and the mails will now come and go as before. The troops bounded and secured the city than Porta Salara, three miles from the walls, as the fire from bridges over the Tevere at that point was blown up by the Pope's troops. Hardly a foreign visitor is now in Rome; and with the exception of two or three officers, I am alone in the large Hotel Europa. The other inns are as badly off; although the prospect for the coming Winter season ought to be good. As soon as the rubbish which encumbers the gates can be removed, the coming and going will be as free as in any other city, no more passports and no more questions asked. The Corso, the principal promenade, will be open to-day. Two new daily newspapers have been started here, and soon the streets will be as noisy with the cries of the newsmen as are now those of Florence. The Romans will for the first time know what is going on in the world. While this visit lasts, I will keep you informed of what is done from day to day.

ANGELICO.

Letter of Victor Emmanuel to Pius IX.

The Italian journals publish the following letter, addressed by King VICTOR EMMANUEL to the Pope, and sent to His Holiness by Count PONZA DE SAN MARTINO:

MOST HOLY FATHER: With the affection of a son, with the faith of a Catholic, with the loyalty of a King, with the sentiment of an Italian, I address myself again, as I have done formerly, to the heart of your Holiness.

A storm full of perils threatens Europe. Favored by the war which desolates the centre of the Continent, the party of the revolution increases in courage and audacity, and is preparing tempestuous, especially in Italy and in the provinces governed by your Holiness, the last throes of the monarchy and the Papacy.

I know, most Holy Father, that the greatness of your soul would not fall before the greatness of events, but for me, a Catholic King and an Italian King, and as such guardian and surety by the dispensation of Divine Providence and by the will of the nation and of the destinies of all Italians, I feel the duty of taking, in face of Europe and of Catholicity, the responsibility of maintaining order in the peninsula, and the security of the Holy See.

Now, most Holy Father, the state of mind of the populations governed by your Holiness, and the presence among them of foreign troops coming from different places with different intentions, are a source of agitation, and of perils evident to all. Chance or the effervescence of passions may lead to violence and to an effusion of blood, which it is my duty and yours, most Holy Father, to avoid and prevent.

I see the indefeasible necessity for the security of Italy and the Holy See that my troops already guarding the frontiers should advance and occupy the positions which shall be indispensable to the security of your Holiness and to the maintenance of order.

Your Holiness will not see a hostile act in this measure of precaution. My Governors and any forces will restrict themselves absolutely to an attitude conservative and tutelary of the rights, easily reconcilable, of the Roman populations with the inviolability of the Sovereign Pontiff and of his spiritual authority, and with the temporal power of the Holy See.

If your Holiness, as I do not doubt, and as your sacred character and the goodness of your soul give me the right to hope, is inspired with a wish equal to mine of avoiding all conflict and escaping the danger of violence, you will be able to take, with the Count PONZA DI SAN MARTINO, who presents you this letter, and who is furnished with the necessary instructions by my Government, those measures which shall best conduce to the desired end.

Will your Holiness permit me to hope still that the present nations, as solemn for Italy as for the Church and for the Papacy, will give decision to the exercise of that spirit of benevolence which has never been extinguished in your heart toward this land, which is also your own country, and of those sentiments of conciliation which I have always studied with an indefatigable perseverance to translate into acts, in order that while satisfying the national aspirations the Chief of Catholicity, surrounded by the devotion of the Italian populations, might preserve on the banks of the Tiber a glorious seat independence of all human severeignty?

Your Holiness, in delivering Rome from the foreign troops, in freeing it from the continual peril of being the battle-field of adversative parties, will have accomplished a work worthy of a given peace to the Church, and shown to Europe, shocked by the horrors of war, how great battles can be won and immortal victories achieved by an act of justice and by a single word of affection.

I beg your Holiness to bestow upon me your apostolic benediction, and I remain in your Holiness the expression of my and of respect for Holiness' most humble, most obedient, and most devoted son, VICTOR EMMANUEL.

FLORENCE, Sept. 8, 1870.

ENGLISH MEDIATION.

Deputation to Mr. Gladstone on the War.

On Sept. 27, Mr. GLADSTONE received a deputation of working men representing the trade societies of London, whose object was to urge on Her Majesty's Government the duty of mediation between France and Germany in the interest of peace. Mr. GEORGE POTTER, Mr. APPLEGARTH and other speakers addressed the right honorable gentleman, pointing out the evils which must result from the continuance of the war. They urged, also, that the working men are opposed to the dismemberment of France, and advocated the recognition of the Republican Government. Mr. GLADSTONE answered them thus:

MR. GLADSTONE'S REMARKS.

There are two or three main points which are set out in your resolutions; I will take them in the reverse order to which they stand. The third is in relation to a system of international arbitration; the second relates to mediation for the purpose of bringing about the close of hostilities; and the first is the recognition of the French Government. As regards the third—the use of international arbitration, or of reference to the good offices of a third party where a quarrel appears to be impending—I do not believe there is a single shade of difference between your sentiments and those of the Government. Particularly, as far as the principle is concerned, it does not depend on us to inaugurate that system, strictly speaking, because at the conferences which accompanied the peace of Paris in 1856 the principle of such a system was recommended to the consideration of all Powers with all the authority that the voice of the United Kingdom could give; and where we have been concerned we have not declined ourselves to recognize that principle, and we endeavored to urge it in the present case. When this great and terrible war was on the point of breaking out we urged it upon both parties. The reasons of the failure of that proposal are on record; I need not refer to them. As regards the second resolution, that which expresses your desire that the Government should exercise its influence in bringing about a cessation of hostilities between France and Germany, you cannot possibly desire that cessation more than we do; you cannot be more earnest in the wish that an opportunity should be found where we could exercise a real influence for that purpose. I must say that I think nothing could be more unjust than a charge of lukewarmness that is made by any one against the Government of this country with respect to averting this war before it arose. I do not think there was any one point of it was possible for us to take which was not taken for the purpose of averting it. And as to the feeling with which those steps was taken, the subject was our constant care by day and by night, and our measures were adopted with the best consideration we could give, and with the earnest hope of purpose which it was possible to have. Then, when we came to the close of the session, we advised a declaration in the speech from the throne—which is the most solemn form of assurance a government can give—that we should be on the earnest watch for an opportunity of useful intervention, but the only thing that we have been able to do was to endeavor to bring the two parties face to face: that was obviously the first step to take, and we shall continue to do as we have done, watching any opening that may be offered according to the best judgment we can form, where any representation of ours may afford reasonable hope of a restoration of peace. That is the general basis upon which we stand.

THE DEMOCRATIC SENTIMENT.

Mr. GLADSTONE then referred to the remarks which had been made as to the feelings of the working men of this country and those of the democratic classes in Germany. He had no doubt that the deputation accurately represented the feelings of the working men of this country with regard to a desire that this terrible bloodshed should cease, but they must expect great nations engaged in conflict to claim to themselves to be in the first instance and last resort the proper judges of their own affairs. He hoped great weight would be given by the parties engaged in the opinions of the opinions of the neutral Powers, as he was satisfied when the neutral Powers were listened to, this country would be listened to with a weight inferior to that of no other State; but it was necessary before the neutral Powers determined upon so grave a step as that of offering, with some approach to authority, a recommendation to the belligerents, that they should see their way very clearly as to the precise form. With regard to the democratic sentiments said by the speakers to be existing in Germany, if that party was a strong one it would make itself heard, and he quite agreed in the hope that the expression of any such sentiments in Germany would be quite free.

INFLUENCE OF DYNASTIC INTERESTS.

The right honorable gentleman then said: Now we come to the main point of this discussion, because the position of the Government in France is on the threshold of this question. Everything that has been said as respects the principles upon which we ought to proceed I entirely accept. It has been thought that there has been a dynastic interest at work to prevent the recognition of the Government of France, and that there is some contrast to be found between the tardiness in recognising the present French Government and the promptitude with which a Government of a different form and different origin was recognized on a different occasion. Now allow me to assure you that this is not so. Mr. GLADSTONE then proceeded to show that the present Provisional Government was for all practical working purposes recognized by us. Then arose the question in what form, in what style upon which the Government was to proceed; it would recognize any Government which the French people chose to accept for themselves. But (continued Mr. GLADSTONE) as it is not our business to interfere in the internal respect, so neither is it our business to go before France. If, before the Government exercising power in France has been recognized by the the country, we recognize that Government, we are expressing an opinion that France has not expressed. The right honorable gentleman then proceeded to show that the present form of Government in France had not been repudiated by that country, and added that as soon as France had decided upon what form of government she would have, this country would be ready to recognize it with as much alacrity as the last form of government had been recognized.

TERMS OF PEACE.

In reply to a question, Mr. GLADSTONE said that the terms upon which any peace might hereafter be made was a matter of the greatest gravity, and it must be plain to the deputation that anything the Government might have to say upon that, it ought to say in the first instance to the parties themselves.

NAPOLEON III.

Alleged Attempted Suicide at the Emperor.

The Presse, published at Vienna, gives the following extraordinary piece of correspondence from Cassels: "The Prussian Government has issued the strongest prohibition against the receipt at the Telegraph Office of a report of the circumstances which I shall now relate to you from authentic sources. In spite of all attempts at concealment, yesterday the news spread here like wildfire that NAPOLEON had, on the 18th, made an attempt at suicide. The details of the affair, as communicated by the officer on guard, are as follows: NAPOLEON, for two days, exhibited a strange elevation of spirits, which, up to this, had not been perceptible in him. He received, during the last few days, several dispatches and letters from Paris and Hastings, spoke extremely little, and for the two days left his room only once. This was about 5 o'clock in the evening. He had given orders that all dispatches which arrived should be brought to him immediately, wherever he was. Two, which had just come from Hastings and Brussels, were accordingly taken to him in the park. He read them, and grew visibly pale. He then returned to his room, and shut himself up in his room. After, they had seen or heard nothing of him for two hours, his immediate attendants began to be alarmed. About 8½ o'clock they resolved, on the pretext of having something important to communicate, to ask for admission into his room. Prince MURAT undertook the task, but to his repeated knocks and calls no answer was returned. After ball an hour they broke open the door, and found NAPOLEON lying on the sofa in a deep faint. Two physicians were immediately fetched, and they succeeded, after the lapse of half hour, in bringing NAPOLEON to himself. Everything here points to an attempt at suicide, to which, of course, the officials will not agree. The Governor of Cassel made his appearance at a still later hour in the castle, which was in a state of the greatest confusion. The Governor did not leave till morning, and has sent a long document of the occurrence to headquarters. The whole population of Cassel went out today to Wilhelmshoehe to see NAPOLEON. He, however, 'in consequence of severe illness,' kept his room." The Presse evidently, and it would appear with reason, disbelieves the whole story. It adds: "Of late, in Belfort, there is scarcely any bad news which could affect the Emperor so severely."

THE BOURBONS.

The Comte de Chambord Claims the Throne.

The Phaire de Loire publishes the following letter, which, it asserts, has been written and distributed by the Count DE CHAMBORD:

"Monseigneur is greatly affected by the situation of France. He follows with anxious solicitude the disastrous events which have brought the enemy before Paris, and now his bosom swells with the touch that it is perhaps to him, with Providence for his help, that should be confided the honor of saving our unhappy country.

The French Monarchy, of which Monseigneur is the heir, and which is resumed in his person, has done great things in days past, and more than once has saved France.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

TENT-LIFE IN SIBERIA. By GEORGE KENNAN. New-York: G. P. PUTNAM & SONS. London: LOW, SON & MARSTON.

The failure of the Western Union Telegraph Company to make an overland line of wires to Europe by way of Asia, has been in one sense compensated for, at least as regards the reading public, by the books of Messrs. WHYMPER and DALL, and now that of the present author—all describing the wild and out-of-the-way parts of the world the line would have to run through, in British Columbia and Alaska, and along the coasts, steppes and straits of Russian Siberia. COLUMBUS himself may be said to have failed east in this direction; and as old MOZTAZINES would say, his defeat was as good as the successes of most other men.

At any rate, these books about the rather tribes of humanity are very interesting to the rest of mankind; and we are very agreeably carried by Mr. KENNAN among the chiefly coasts and creeks of the Sea of Okhotsk, and into the wilds of the Kamtchadals, Koraks and other tribes of the extreme verge of Asia. Under the direction of Col. BULKLEY, as engineer-in-chief of the proposed line, our author, in company with the Russian Superintendent, Major ABASA, Messrs. MAHOON and BUSH, proceeded from San Francisco in 1865, and in August landed at Petropaulsky on the peninsula of Kamtchatka; from which place the two last mentioned went down through the Sea of Okhotsk to the mouth of the Amoor, for the purpose of surveying the country round the west coast of that sea. The others went up through the mountain peninsula aforesaid, intending to join MAHOON and BUSH at Geeshega, at the northern extremity of the land-locked gulf, and then explore the remainder of the way to the Anadyr River, lying to the north, in the neighborhood of the Arctic circle and Behring Strait. Our traveler's first experience of Kamtchatka was a surprise—mainly because he first saw it in a genial season. Instead of the hard, gray, frost-bitten country, which all old associations of the name prepared him to expect, he found green valleys, covered with flowers and a vegetation of the greatest luxuriance, swarming with birds, and traversed by rivers alive with fishes in great variety, while over all rose here and there, through the mists of that strange Oberland, the summits of snow-covered volcanoes, tallest of which ran up the Klochefskoi, over 16,000 feet above the level of the sea. In November, 1865, our author and his companions, after a journey of twelve hundred miles, found themselves at the Russian settlement of Geeshega, on the upper coast of the Sea of Okhotsk, lying in the proposed route, between the northern station at the mouth of the Anadyr River, near Behringe, and the mouth of the Amoor, away to the south. In February, 1866, the entire party were again together at that place, comparing notes and experiences. They had found the country "though by no means favorable to the construction of a telegraph, presenting no obstacle which energy and perseverance could not overcome." During 1866 and up to the Summer of 1867, they made a variety of preparations, employing laborers, cutting posts, making stations, and distributing the stores received in the vessels from San Francisco; till at last they heard, from the men of the Sea Breeze, of New-Bedford, that the Atlantic line had been laid at last; and on the 15th of July they received the Company's orders to discharge the laborers, close up the business and return to America. The terrible Winters of the howling Siberian wilderness might have been overcome; but these and the successful ocean cable together would have been too much to contend against. The narrative manner of Mr. KENNAN is full of animation and pleasantry. Indeed, his great facetiousness would be in keeping with the most successful undertaking in the world; and it is only at the last page or two that the reader feels anything like disappointment. The book is prepared in the usual elegant style of Mr. PUTNAM'S press.

NOTES AND QUERIES ON CHINA AND JAPAN. Vols. I., II., III. Hong Kong. 1869.
THE TREATY PORTS OF CHINA AND JAPAN.
NOTES FOR TOURISTS IN THE NORTH OF CHINA.
A MONGOLIAN VOCABULARY.

These works, edited or compiled by Mr. N. B. DENNIS, late editor of the China Mail, form an appreciable addition to the stock of printed matter relating to the countries they treat of, and appear to have been very favorably reviewed by the local foreign Press. The Notes and Queries is after the plan of its English prototype, a collection of short contributions from sinologues, orientalists, and the general public, which affords a mine of wealth to those interested in the ethnology, geography and philology of Eastern Asia. The patience of the editor must have been severely tried by the Chinese compositors, upon whom devolved the work of setting copy embracing so many dissimilar languages. Articles involving the use of Chinese, French, German, Latin, Hebrew, and many other tongues, abound in its pages, and even hieroglyphics, specially cut for the purpose, appear among the collection. Apart from these ultra-learned morceaux, however, are many interesting pages in sober English, and the editor may be congratulated upon the success of his effort to establish this useful medium of literary intercommunication. The Treaty Ports is a volume of some 500 pages, giving ample particulars of the places open to foreign trade in China and Japan. As the only work of the kind existing, it appears to be a most useful aid to both residents and strangers, and reflects credit upon its joint authors, Messrs. MAYERS, KING, and DENNIS. The preface informs us that it was printed entirely by Chinese, and deprecates too severe a criticism of certain typographical errors—a plea we readily admit, in consideration of its general accuracy. The Notes for Tourists is a pamphlet which travelers in North China pronounce most useful. The maps of Pekin, in this and the Treaty Ports were constructed by Mr. DENNIS, and are the first of the sort ever published. A Mongolian Vocabulary, is chiefly remarkable as the only attempt yet made to express the language of that nomadic people in roman type. It is a little duodecimo of a few pages, and will doubtless be soon superseded by a more pretentious and comprehensive work. Meantime Mr. DENNIS enjoys the distinctum of having acted as the pioneer in a philological field hitherto unexplored.

BLEAK HOUSE. LITTLE DORRITT. DAVID COPPERFIELD. By CHARLES DICKENS. Illustrated by SOL. EYTINGE, Jr. Boston: FIELDS, OSGOOD & Co.

These are three volumes of the Illustrated Household Edition of the great novelist's works. They are at once handsome and of a convenient size. The type and binding are excellent, and the artist's share in the work is to be especially commended. Mr. EYTINGE succeeds admirably in presenting the characteristics of the writer's ideal portraits, which we take to be the best evidence of his talent and conscientious labor.

OUTLINES OF HISTORY, WITH ORIGINAL TABLES. By ROBERT H. LABBERTON. Philadelphia: CLAXTON, REMSEN & HAFFELFINGER. 1870.

The work before us is introduced in a somewhat pretentious preface, which the matter that follows utterly fails to bear out. There is considerable justice in the writer's strictures upon the imperfections of existing methods of teaching history in our schools, but we fail to perceive that the strictly chronological tools which is here introduced to public attention, will do much to supply the want of a more interesting and intelligible mode of presenting the records of the past. To present history in its true character of "a vast, continuous, harmonious whole," is doubtless a very desirable achievement, but this is not to be accomplished by ignoring the various widely divergent lines along which its progress may be traced. The mere chronological arrangement of events is frequently a very misleading bond of union, and unless studied with reference to a more philosophical kind of connection, is practically useless. What possible instruction can be gained, for instance, in treating of MACCHIAVELLI, in connection with the epoch distinguished as that of the Wars of the Roses, or of ABELARDA and DANTE, contemporaneously with the Anglo-Scotch struggle? Nor, coming to more modern times, is there anything but confusion introduced into the mind of a pupil by recalling the name of ALFIERI, in connection with the Anglo-American Revolution, or by the still more slovenly device of crowding the historical names and events of twenty years into a period loosely designated as "since the July Revolution of 1830." The really valuable part of the book seems to us to be contained in the appendix, where a highly suscinct and suggestive outline of the course of ancient and modern history is presented, and in the carefully-drawn-up synoptic tables with which the volume concludes.

GEOLOGY AND REVELATION. By GERALD MOLLOY, D.D. New-York: G. P. PUTNAM & SONS.

Dr. MOLLOY, having devoted some years to the study of geology, in order to test the accordance of the science by the tenets of Revelation, has found, that the phenomena of the one may be logically and happily reconciled with the principles of the other. He coincides with the opinion of Cardinal WISEMAN on the subject, and justifies his views by a number of apt quotations from the writings of the early fathers of the Church. As regards religion, Dr. MOLLOY shows himself sufficiently orthodox; and, as regards science, LYELL or HUMBOLDT would pronounce him just as orthodox. For the rest, this book is written in the most agreeable and lucid style of instruction, and we have not seen a work on the important subject of the prehistoric earth, and its wonderful growths of ages, which conveyed a clearer or more satisfactory idea of the whole science. It has learning for the most learned student, and an easy familiarity of statement and illustration, which is always so welcomed to the general reader, and which he does not always find in such discussions—so that we can imagine what a good, serviceable book it would be to present to a boy or girl as a Christmas or New-Year's gift. The printing, the paper, the numerous illustrations, and the whole bringing out of it, are quite in keeping with the worth of the publication.

THE OPEN DOOR; OR, LIGHT AND LIBERTY. By J. HYATT SMITH. New-York: THEODORE E. FREEMAN.

The purpose of this book, which is in a narrative form, is to examine into the spirit and practice of the Baptist Church, as to their agreement with its published professions. The author contrasts, in this story of the Baptist Church of Eyansdale, "the bigotry of the church, in an age fast passing away, with the liberality and love of the present day." He protests against the continuance of obstructive declarations which repel thousands of disciples of Christ, who, believing that only immersion is baptism, have sought refuge and home in the Pedo-baptist Church. Let, he says, the growing liberalism which his Church really practices be her published profession also. The story itself is vigorously and tersely related, and shows discriminating ability and skill in the delineation of the various characters involved—qualities which will commend it to the general reader. The book will be unquestionably popular among the members of the Church to which it is chiefly addressed, and who will, even where they may not wholly accept his views, find it difficult to refute his arguments, or to find faults with the tone and spirit of their illustration.

A COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY SCRIPTURE—CRITICAL, DOCTRINAL AND RELIGIOUS. By JOHN PETER LANGE, D. D., in connection with a number of eminent European divines. Translated from the German, revised, enlarged, and edited by PHILIP SCHAFF, in connection with American scholars of various Evangelical denominations. Vol. VII. of the New Testament. New-York: CHARLES SCRIBNER & Co. 1870.

This volume, containing a commentary on the Epistles of Paul to the Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians and Colossians, forms the seventh instalment of what is really a magnum opus in theological literature. In common with those which have preceded it, the present volume has the characteristic of bringing the results of the latest criticism and philological research to bear upon the elucidation of the sacred writings, regarded from an Evangelical stand-point. The dicta of opposing schools of interpretation are frankly stated, and the authorities are given for rejecting them. The doctrinal sections of the Commentary are conceived in a spirit of great tolerance, but are at the same time stated without ambiguity, and with a clear definition of their logical consequences. The series of volumes cannot fail to be of great service to ministers and students, for whom they are more particularly intended.

WORKDAY CHRISTIANITY. By ALEXANDER CLARK. Philadelphia: CLAXTON, REMSEN & HAFFELFINGER.

In this book, as in so many other works of religious instruction, there is a purpose of bringing the avocations and sciences of social life into harmony with the words and doctrines of Revelation; and a number of our trades are brought into appropriate juxtaposition with several texts of the Bible. Each of these trades—the carpenter, the mason, the brick-layer, the founder, the machinist, the potter, the glass-maker, the printer, the tiller, the weaver, the day-laborer—has its own essay, headed with its motto, of more or less fitness. That of the carpenter—a trade put at the head of all others—being: "Is not this the carpenter?" (Mark vi., 3;) and that of the printer: "O that my words were now written; O that they were printed in a book!" (Job xix., 23.) A great many good workmen would doubtless be gratified to find how much of the Gospel is wrapt up with their customary avocations, and they would also be benefited by a perusal of these little lay-sermons, which are written in a very attractive style. Mr. CLARK exhibits a very judicious and happy talent for such compositions; and if the "trades" do not take to them, so much the worse for themselves.

MISTAKEN; OR, THE SEEMING AND THE IDEAL. By LYDIA FULLER. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO. 1870.

There is no good reason why Swedenborgianism should not have its romance; but most people who want to have the doctrines of the "Swedish seer" would, we imagine, prefer to have them without the irrelevant admixture of a love-story; and most people who read novels would prefer to have the story without the doctrinal disquisitions. In the present instance, SWEDENBORG has certainly not gained by the alliance, and the narrative, such as it is, has decidedly suffered. The author has been more intent upon outlining a creed than in drawing interesting and well-defined types of character. The personages who figure in the volume are accordingly of the most shadowy and unrecognizable kind, and indulge, within the space of a few short months, in more dreary talk about the inexplicable mysteries of creation and the human soul than we should have supposed anybody capable of accomplishing within a lifetime. We don't know that anybody will be much wiser as to the origin of evil by being informed that it stands in the same relation to the Creator as the shadow does to the tree. To any one impressed with the luminous nature of this theory, we can commend the book as containing a good deal more of the same sort.

GREEK PRAXIS OR GREEK FOR BEGINNERS. By J. A. SPENCER S. T. D., Professor of the Greek Language and Literature in the College of the City of New-York. New-York: TYSON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO. 1870.

This handy little manual seems admirably adapted for the purpose with which it sets out—"to furnish such matter as is essential to a beginner in Greek, and which must be mastered and made his own, before he can enter, with either comfort or satisfaction, upon the reading and translating of a Greek writer." The author very properly dissents from the appletastor of such perfunctory methods as that of OLLENDORF's, to the ancient languages, but at the same time succeeds in showing that a quantity of confusing minutiæ may, with equal advantage, be removed out of the way of the student of the classic as of the modern tongues. To present the grammatical rudiments of Greek, together with reading lessons, notes and vocabulary, in so small a compass, is a work requiring no little pains, and it is no slight praise to say that the author has accomplished it with considerable success.

MONSIEUR SYLVESTRE. A Novel. By GEORGE SAND. Translated from the French by FRANCES GEORGE SHAW. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1870.

This is one of the fictions of the author of Consuelo, whose interest is chiefly of a subjective character. The narrative is contained in a series of letters, which are framed with all the consummate art never absent from the pen of Mme. DUDEVANT. It was first published in 1866, and is throughout concerned with the problems of contemporary society, and the speculations which agitate the contemplative minds of the age. The story is not very exciting, the matter of propriety is by no means peculiarly French. There is a good deal of tender feeling and fruitful delineation of traits of rural character, but the element is probably of bringing together a number of highly remarkable people within the limited area of a rural suburb of Paris is got over, the rest may be accepted as natural enough, and to those who are of an introspective turn of mind, the book will possess many charms. The translation has been very creditably performed.

TREATISE ON THE BANKRUPT LAW. By ANDREW G. MCKINNEY. New-York: GEORGE W. DELLER. 1870.

As the author modestly puts it, "this little work is presented to the public with the hope that it may prove to some degree useful to business men, if not to the profession, until some person more competent and possessed of more leisure, shall furnish a treatise on the provisions and workings of the Bankrupt law, which shall fully meet the wants of the community." The book is, of course, mainly an exposition of the provisions of the act of 2d March, 1867. It is arranged and digested in a manner that is at once very intelligible and very convenient for reference. Forms of all necessary schedules are given in an appendix, and the amended Bankrupt act is reproduced, followed by a very useful index to its clauses. Altogether, the treatise amply fulfills its promise of being useful to the legal student, as well as to the man of business, for whom it is specially intended.

NOTES AND VOCABULARY FOR WHITNEY'S GERMAN READER. New-York: LEYPOLDT & HOLT.

The student of German will find himself largely prompted and assisted by these "notes," in which the text of the Reader is scanned, illustrated, and parsed in a minute and satisfactory manner. It is an excellent kind of "key"—not to use our common school-boy word, "cog;" and the reader of the extracts in the other book is here gratified, furthermore, with short biographical notices of the authors quoted; while, to save the trouble of referring to a regular dictionary, there is added a "vocabulary" of all the words used in the Reader. The student, with this "key" in his hand, will get on almost as well as if he had the teacher at his elbow.

TREATISE ON PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE. By JOSEPH C. HUTCHISSON, M. D. New-York: CLARK & MAYNARD.

The line of Pope—

"The proper study of mankind is man"—

might very fairly be the motto of this book, which instructs the reader in everything most needful to be known respecting his own physical system, and the means and observances by which it may best be kept in a condition of good order and healthful activity—a science which should be learned before any other science in the schools, but which is too often left out of the curriculum altogether. This book teaches a great number of useful things affecting the human body—giving explanations of optics, the microscope, poisons, &c., together with a glossary of the terms commonly used in medical dissertations. A number of illustrations give additional value to the publication.

THE DIVINE COMEDY OF DANTE ALIGHIERI. Translated by HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW. 3 vols. Boston: FIELDS, OSGOOD & CO.

It was eminently fitting that a less expensive edition of Mr. LONGFELLOW'S highly-valued translation than that first published should be placed within the reach of the very large reading public who are familiar with his works. Accordingly, we have such an edition, in three volumes. They are produced with great attention to convenience of form and elegance of type, paper, and binding. The mere announcement of this publication will be received with pleasure, and will, no doubt, be followed by a large demand for copies of the book.

THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, according to the use of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America. Albany: CHARLES VAN BENTHUYSEN & SONS. 1870.

Our attention has been directed to this volume in consequence of a paragraph copied into the TIMES, stating that Bishop DOANE had authorized an edition of the Prayer Book teaching the Scotch doctrine of the Sacraments, &c. The publishers state that the above is the only edition of the Prayer Book authorized by the Bishop, and in it we certainly find no trace of the views regarding the Communion held by a large section of the Scotch Episcopal Church, and of which the Bishop of Brechin is the latest expositor.

THE STUDENT'S LIFE OF WASHINGTON. Condensed from the Larger Work of WASHINGTON IRVING. New-York: G. P. PUTNAM & SON. 1870.

This volume supplies a desideratum by presenting in a compact and readable form the essential portions of the contents of WASHINGTON IRVING'S great work. Its usefulness to the juvenile student might have been increased by the addition of a chronological summary and a copious index. The manner in which the work of compression has been effected is, however, deserving of all praise. The steel engravings which accompany the book are very creditably executed.

MARK DUNNING'S ENEMY. By MARY DEVINEE CHELLIS. Boston: HENRY A. YOUNG & CO. 1870.

Novels with a purpose are seldom very entertaining books, and there is a certain manner, too, about "temperance tales," standard, or otherwise, that probably prevents them from having a higher range of utility than that of supplying to the faithful abstainer a congenial species of literary recreation. We find nothing in the present volume to distinguish it from the general mediocrity of cognate productions. The moral is certainly better than the story.

—The New Era is the latest born of the new monthly magazines. We lately adverted, in another column, to the principles on which it was to be conducted as set forth in the salutatory of its editor, Rev. MARSHAL D. LEWIS. The periodical bears upon its title-page that it is "devoted to the interests of religion and humanity, and to the diffusion of knowledge on Judaism and Jewish literature." Mr. LEWIS is well known as one of the boldest and most uncompromising of the reformers of the Jewish Church. His own contributions to the magazine before us are characterized by all the vigor and eloquence for which he has a well-earned reputation. The chief articles contained in the first number are "One God and One Religion," "Reason and Religion," "The Modern View of Nature," and "The Genesis of Novel Writing." None of the contributors are names known in the field of magazine literature, but the merits of these papers are, nevertheless, very considerable. The stand-point from which the theological and philosophical questions under discussion are viewed, is a consistently rationalistic one. This is no new development of the Jewish mind, but it is somewhat of a novelty to find it becoming the distinctive feature in an aggressive and reforming effort of the Jewish Church. One at least of Mr. LEWIS'S collaborateurs is evidently not of Jewish race, and the prospectus of the periodical announces that writers not adhering to the faith of Judaism will regularly contribute to its pages. Altogether "the only Jewish monthly magazine in the English language" is a very creditable addition to our stock of periodicals.

Shoemakers' Strike at Baltimore—The Employers Treat With the Strikers.

The Baltimore American, of the 8th inst., says:

The committee appointed by the manufacturers of custom work a few days since to confer with the boot and shoe makers for the purpose of inducing the strikers to modify their bill of charges, have conferred with a committee of the strikers, but did not succeed in their mission. The strikers insist on the rates demanded by them, and avow themselves able to continue the strike for an indefinite period. The bosses are in a quandary as to how they shall act in the premises, and would willingly compromise the matter, but the journeymen declare that they must receive an advance of wages or else they will not resume work. Should the strikers succeed in their demands the price of fine boots and shoes will be materially increased, and the said increase will have to be paid by an already overtaxed community, or coarse work worn. In reference to the existing strike, the employers are regarded as the journeymen as divided into two classes—first, second and third. The first is composed of those engaged almost exclusively in manufacturing for regular stores; the second, of those who do a regular business, but work also for transient customers, and the third, a number of tinkers, who subsist on other shoemakers' work.

The Divine law commands, although it rude in all these classes, falls most heavily on the second class. In order to an intelligible understanding of the subject it should be here stated that the manufacture of boots, shoes and gaiters is divided into two distinct branches—the manufacture of the legs or uppers being one, and the soles and attaching the uppers of single sole boots and gaiters—now so to be denominated) and for the same, double sole, $2.25 was formerly the price—now, by the new schedule of the journeymen, it is $3. For the same work on single sole boots the demand is $2.50 per pair, formerly it was $2, and for double soles $3, instead of $2. The price for work on the uppers has also been advanced in about a like proportion.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Growl from a Traveler.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As a visitor from the other side of the Atlantic, will you permit me to offer a few remarks relative to an article upon "The Street Cars," contained in your paper lately, in which you speak of the advantage gained by the public in the reduction of the fares to five cents. Now, it appears to me that this is one of those very small benefits for which we are taught to be forever grateful; and doubtless the feeling is entertained by the poorer, and from your remarks, I fear, the rougher class of the traveling public. But may I venture to submit that the great struggle for this small result is very suggestive of "straining at the gnat and swallowing the camel?" I am not at all surprised at the insult and annoyance experienced by the respectable class of passengers forced to use this mode of conveyance, the full objection to which, with the attendant risk of loss of property, can be fully realized in the course of one or two journeys. But, Sir, fully appreciating the great service you are rendering in exposing the tremendous abuses existing in this great City, you might add one more service to the many already adduced, and at once raise your voice against the terrible imposition of the hackney carriage drivers, who literally claim to be your "Highwaymen." It is only by forcing the drivers to accept a tariff of fares, dictated by common honesty, that people may escape the risks alluded to in your article. As the matter now stands, by riding in the cheaper vehicle your pocket is picked "against the law," and in availing yourself of the dearer mode of conveyance it is flashed from you with the sanction of the law. You cannot ride a dozen yards without the minimum charge being one dollar. In fact, you are entirely at the mercy of the drivers with respect to their charges. Only yesterday I asked one of these "gentlemen of the road" his charge for taking me about a couple of miles. "Four dollars," was his modest reply. I should think that it was a fair-weather carriage, and in the most dilapidated condition. In fact, driver, horse and cab appeared for many years to have "braved the battle and the breeze" of life. I need scarcely say I indicated to the innocent demand, and after trying two or three other proprietors, eventually succeeded in accomplishing the journey for a reasonable sum, namely, two dollars, which I calculated to represent about eleven shillings (gold) of the currency of that British portion of the globe of which your correspondent is a mean-spirited native. Now, I am aware that I had no right to set foot in your grand and amazing country without having previously charbarred a long purse at least in anticipation of the necessary amount of specie for my very moderate requirements, but having read a little great upon America, entitled "Not so bad," or "so dear," or so something or other "as we seem," why, I provided myself with a draft upon one of your colossal bankers here for five thousand dollars, just to defray my expenses for a couple of months, and enjoy the journey. I shall not soon forget the look of surprise expressed upon the manly countenance of the cashier, when, in course of conversation, I informed him, as he handed me the dusky and moldy-looking notes, these varying representatives of the metallic currency, that I intended to thoroughly enjoy myself for a few weeks. Upon this he good-naturedly suggested that I ought to secure an early passage back, in order to avoid the rough weather. I have since unmistakably interpreted that look of surprise and advice into the firm belief entertained by the giver, that if I did not do so in the course of a few days I should not have enough money left for my passage. Now, Sir, you will say what has all this to do with "car fares." Nothing, I confess, more than a traveler's expression of opinion upon the enormous expense attending everything here, and a hope that in a short time the wisdom of this great people will see the advantage of allowing a free intercourse between the business and pleasure-seekers of the world coming to see the wonders of this glorious country—so enthusiastically appreciated in the first, and, I hope, not the last visit made by

Yours obediently, AN ENGLISHMAN.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your correspondent "R. Mond," is evidently laboring under an erroneous impression, in relation to the existence of a "difference of opinion among the medical officers of the Board of Health." Dr. Monaie, the Sanitary Inspector, requested me to see the cases in the Morgue at Bellevue Hospital, and the cases in hospital on Governor's Island. I gave it, then, as my opinion, that no "contagious disease" existed on Governor's Island, and I am still of the opinion the epidemic on Governor's Island is not contagious, but I have never heard from any physician of the Health Board whether he regarded yellow fever as contagious or not. It is an open question, and advocated by equally high authority can found in the opposition. The history of the first cases on Governor's Island, as given by the Surgeon of the post, were not marked by the characteristic symptoms, regarded as pathognomic of yellow fever. The first case I saw, with all the symptoms which characterize yellow fever, unmistakably, was on the 20th of September.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.
THEODORE R. DUDLEY, M. D.,
Inspector of Street Cleaning.

German Superiority.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I am much surprised that a journal so well informed as the TIMES should labor under such false ideas in reference to the attributes of German superiority in the present war. The German military and educational systems are held up to Americans as something which they should copy; and, in a leading article of a recent number of your journal, the writer lands the King of Prussia as a constitutional monarch, yielding to the control of his Parliament the levy and expenditure of the public taxes, and regarding the Press of Germany as the unfettered exponents of the popular will. Now, firstly, as to the question of popular education. I have before me a comparative statement of the average attendance at the public schools of various countries of Europe, according to population, which was compiled by Mr. JAMES W. GERARD for the Board of Education of this City. Here it is: In Prussia, the average school attendance was eighty per cent. of those of school age; in France, seventy-six; in Austria, forty; in Spain, —benighted Spain!—eighty; in Switzerland—a Republic—ninety-five; in Sweden, sixty-two; in Bavaria—which is German Catholic—eighty-three; in Denmark, ninety; in Belgium, sixty-six; in Norway, eighty. England and Ireland are not given. Secondly, as to the Prussian military system of compulsory service. "It is," to use the language of Superintendent RANDALL, "inconsistent with the genius of free institutions." Under it every citizen has to spend three years, at the most important time of life, within the precincts of a barracks, his liberty under the restraint of martial law, and his industrial labor lost to society. After that service in the regular army, he is placed on the reserve, and is still only a soldier, as it were, on furlough. And yet, see what poor soldiers these Germans make in our country, in comparison with Americans or Irishmen. In our State militia they are the laughing-stock of the people who view processions on holidays—talking in the ranks, unequal in line and step, smoking and drinking at every halt, ill-tempered in their intercourse with civilians while on duty, and noisy and excited in their movements. In our regular army, to which they contribute a larger proportion of recruits than even Americans or Irish, they lack the esprit de corps and soldierly "setup" of either. Perhaps it is their "soldiering" experience that has incapacitated so many Germans from employments more honorable and useful than barbers and chiffoniers, and street musicians, and liquor and cigar dealers. Thirdly, as to the freedom enjoyed under the Prussian Government, the fact that so many of them are compelled to run away from their own country to citizen is hardly in favor of such a belief. Why do they come here in such hordes, and invoke the protection of our Government against that of their own country? Kick Wilhelm and his military minions out of Prussia, and those who were active—in evidence—in the unprovoked aggression of the German people, in fine, be sent to war with Austria, and arbitrarily helped himself from the treasury of Prussia, the Prussian Parliament refused to supply the Press said the public sentiment was completely under his control, and exist only at his will, as Dr. JACOBY, GUSTAVE SCHURZ, FRANZ SIGEL, and others testify. In many country towns of Prussia the bell-crier is the only gazette known to the people.

As to your quoting Mr. LOWE, the Chancellor of the British Exchequer, as an authority, wherein he tells us that "an armed nation is the best defense of popular rights and individual freedom," I would refer you to the fact that the British Government, of which Mr. LOWE is a leading member, takes good care that the Irish nation shall not be armed, not to say drilled and disciplined, for which purpose it has been penal offences if practiced by Irishmen in Ireland. Mr. LOWE thus unwittingly confesses that Irishmen in Ireland must be kept in slavish subjection, if his doctrine be accepted as a premise. An armed nation of citizens, like that of the United States, is a different thing from an armed nation of professional soldiers, like that of Prussia, whereas the citizen becomes extinct in the soldier, subject to martial law and compulsory idleness.

Lawrence County, Ind., has a family of fifteen persons, named JOLLY, whose combined weight exceeds 3,000 pounds. Five of them, three brothers and two sisters, unitedly measure thirty-three feet. Some time since seven of the number joined the Methodist Church on the same day. A jolly good family, truly.

The champion hopper of the period has turned up at Albany. He has only one leg, but shows so much expertness in the use of it that he challenges the world to produce a man who can out-hop him. Last week he hopped a mile in front of the Capitol, to the admiration of a large crowd. What next?

At the recent meetings of the Manchester manufacturing companies, the accounts of one corporation—the Manchester Print Works—showed a decline of twenty per cent. in the production of last year. The sales were about $3,000,000—over half a million less than the previous year, and the loss on the sales of goods during the year, upward of $460,000.

The Nashua Bank, one of the best known of the old New-Hampshire State banks, has wound up its affairs, and divided the remaining surplus, amounting to seven per cent., which makes a total division of seventy-five per cent. It had been in existence for a quarter of a century, and from the start gave its stockholders eight per cent. upon their investments.

Failing to secure justice at San Francisco, the other day, for a breach of contract, a few wealthy Celestials of that city took the law into their own hands, seized the spokesman of their brother barbarians, who had failed to come to time, carried him into a small room, pinioned him with a rope and a broom-stick, bent him to a sitting posture, placed a piece of wood in his mouth, and kept him in that position for three days.

Hon. CORNELIUS COLE, United States Senator from California, was honored with a serenade at San Francisco recently, on his arrival from Washington. In response to a general call, he made a short speech, in which he spoke of the railroad union between the East and West. He said: "Most of the cities and towns in the interior round it to their advantage to order many of their goods directly from the East, and San Francisco did not now entirely supply the wants of the vast country which had heretofore been tributary to her. He was confident that trade would soon resume its legitimate channel, and that if manufactories were built up, and the struggling interests and enterprises encouraged, all would soon come out right. What we needed was more manufactories."

A Gang of Highwaymen Arrested.

JOHN KANE, of Poughkeepsie, was, early yesterday morning, assaulted by a gang of thieves at the corner of West and Morris streets, who with considerable violence, robbed him of a small sum of money. The cries for help uttered by the victim, attracted the attention of Sergt. OATES and officer ROBINSON, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct, who gave chase to the gang as they scattered in an effort to escape. The officers were fortunate in arresting one of the men, named PATRICK BRENNAN, whom they found concealed under a trunk, and also PETER SCANLAN, who made a desperate attempt to escape by leaping into the North River and swimming into the stream. He was overhauled by means of a boat. Both of the accused were subsequently arraigned before Justice HOGAN at the Tombs, who held them for trial at the General Sessions in default of $5,000 bail each. The unfortunate complainant was sent to the House of Detention.

Serious Affray among Policemen—The Combatants Held to Bail.

At an early hour, yesterday morning, patrolmen PATRICK SLAVIN, CHAS. DUNLEARY and PATRICK, MCLAUGHLIN, all assigned to the Second Precinct, entered the Pearl-street Hotel, at the corner of Pearl and Ferry streets, for the purpose of obtaining breakfast. This proceeding was harmless enough, but the officers became involved in a quarrel, while discussing their meal, and so far forgot themselves and the Police Department that they had recourse to violence, and a free fight was the result. The affray lasted several minutes, to the great annoyance and inconvenience of the guests and employes of the hotel, and during the progress McLAUGHLIN was severely bitten in the neither limb. McLAUGHLIN in the cheek and lip, all of which patents being pretty well bruised and cut in the irregular struggle. The noise attracted the attention of the officer on post, who secured all three of his brother officers, and escorted them to the Beekman-street Police Station, when Capt. DE CAMP treated his subordinates as prisoners, and sent them to the Tombs to answer the counter charges of assault they made against each other. When the culprit policemen appeared before Justice HOGAN, it appeared that the principal fight was between SLAVIN and McLAUGHLIN, and that DUNLEARY acted as a peace-maker. All three of the accused were, however, held to bail in the sum of $800 each to await a trial.

The object of this assemblage, which is the first of the kind ever held in this country, is to discuss the whole subject of prison discipline, and the treatment of criminals and offenders of all grades against the good order and well-being of society. Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, Speaker of the House of Representatives, has consented to preside over the Congress, and will open its proceedings with an address to-morrow evening. A large number of the most distinguished authorities on the subject of the reformation of prisons both in this country and Europe, have promised to be present or to furnish papers upon the various subjects to be discussed by the Congress.

the prepayment of $1,500,000 of the 5 ₩ cents of 1871. The whole supply of Gold Certificates left in the Banks is about $11,000,000, and the actual Coin in Bank about $9,500,000. The November coupons are not yet presented for prepayment, and we understand that a considerable share of the 5 ₩ cents of 1871 are held in the Savings Banks, and are not likely to be presented before January, unless on the inducement of higher rates for the use of Gold than at present. It is therefore to be apprehended that Gold will continue scarce for a fortnight to come, though the principal holders of the cash Gold seem content to take the daily bonuses paid for its use, without attempting to advance the price of the Gold in order to sell it out on a "corner."

The Bank returns continue to run down, and the present excess of lawful Money over the required 25 ₩ cent. in liabilities is below eight million of dollars. But Money in the open market, nevertheless, keeps very easy on temporary loan at 5@6 ₩ cent., and the amount of Merchant paper pressing for discounts is not sufficient to advance the rate on short-date prime bills over 7 ₩ cent. at Bank and 7@8 ₩ cent. on the Street. The exceptional time negotiations, heretofore referred to, on account of new Railway undertakings, are made at higher rates, but they are not felt on the general market.

Near the close of the week there was a revival in the Railway and Miscellaneous Share speculation on the Stock Exchange, but none in the Public Funds of the United States or the Southern State Bonds. Most of the latter continue dull of sale. The old Railway (Currency interest) Mortgages on the Western Roads, and the 6 and 7 ₩ cent. Bonds of the New-York Central and other Eastern Roads, appear to be strongly held, and have been so long well distributed that the market is strong on the orders to buy for investment or for their various Sinking Funds. The new General Mortgage of the Lake Shore Line is still before the public by the Brokers of the Company, and the Pacific Gold 6 ₩ cent. Mortgages are in good supply, and attract buyers at current quotations of 89@90 for Unions, and 90@90½ for Centrals. The advance in the New-York Central and New-Jersey Central Stocks and Scrip since Saturday week is about 1½ ₩ cent.; on Delaware and Lackawanna, 91@94 ₩ cent.; on Hannibal and St. Joseph Preferred, 4 ₩ cent.; Reading, 2½; and on Pacific Mail, 1 ₩ cent. On the active Western list the rise is 2 ₩ cent. on Rock Island, and from 1 to 1½ ₩ cent. on the other lines, the market showing considerable strength at the close of business on Saturday.

It is remarked that notwithstanding the momentous events pending before the great city of Paris, the War news has almost ceased to influence the financial markets here, while the superabundance of Money in London and Frankfort has actually advanced our Public Funds abroad.

The weekly averages of the Associated Local and National Banks in the Clearing-house of this City, for the week ending Saturday last, Oct. 8, compare as follows with the previous week, and with the corresponding week last year, to which we add the Specie and Currency balances in the New-York offices of the United States Treasury, at these dates, respectively:

The Banks lose on their Specie averages of the week $675,848, and in Greenbacks $609,[illegible]. Their Loans are down $1,466,272, and their general line of Deposits is down $3,314,427. The shipments of Gold and Silver of all descriptions for the week amount to $652,174, of which only $212,000 is in American Gold Coin. The Treasury Office received for Gold Customs during the week $3,808,382, and disposed of $1,[illegible] of the principal of the 5 ₩ cent. Loans of 1871 due 1st of January. The amount of Gold interest on the Public Debt paid out to Sept. 1st, 1870, was $[illegible]. Gold was higher at 112¾@113 ₩ cent. than on Friday, on the extreme scarcity and the high rates exacted by holders for lending its use. The sales, after reaching 113¾ ₩ cent., fell off to 112¾ ₩ cent. Money was in large supply from private lenders at eleven rates on call, 4@5 ₩ cent. per annum, at the close of the day. The Public Funds showed no particular sympathy with the stiffness in Gold, and left off about the same as on Friday.

There was a better show of speculative interest and rising quotations on the Stock Exchange in the New-York and Western Roads than for any day of the week. The Long Room was quite a scene of old-fashioned animation for an hour or two, though qualler times of a renewed of activity having suddenly failed several times this season, a good many of the Brokers, no doubt, determined misgivings of a sustained rise. The shares of the Pacific Mail entered into the speculation, and there was more than the usual business done in such Roads as Delaware and Lackawanna, and Hannibal and St. Joseph. On the active Western list, Lake Shore attracted the largest buying, while the Chicago and Rock Island advanced to 113 ex dividend, equal to about 115 ₩ cent. After the late Board the following quotations were made as compared with Friday night:

But, in case the Legislature shall assemble before the time for the payment of tolls on the canal tolls or otherwise to be paid, or of such contribution to the sinking fund, shall be ins

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

The balloon by which M. GAMBETTA left Paris was accompanied, at the beginning of its voyage, by one containing two gentlemen of this City, who took the means of leaving the besieged city. They brought files of the Paris journals up to the 7th inst., from which we print extracts forwarded by telegraph from Tours. The American balloon travelers confirm the statements of the determined spirit of the people of Paris. The representatives of foreign nations still remaining in Paris had recently held a meeting at the Papal Nuncio's to consider the position in which they were placed by Count BISMARCK's refusal to permit their dispatches to be transmitted without being opened, which condition the diplomatists have unanimously refused to submit to. This determination is to be communicated to Count BISMARCK, and should he persist, they will be compelled to suspend all communication with their respective Governments. M. GAMBETTA'S journey was attended with several hair-breath escapes, his balloon having descended five or three times in close proximity to the Prussians. The Journal Officiel of Paris prints the answers of the Prefects to the circular of the Minister of the Interior at the date of the declaration of war, from which it is made clear that the people were in favor of peace. Our London correspondent telegraphs that the siege guns are all in place before Paris, and within another week the assault will begin, possibly on the 16th, the anniversary of the battle of Leipsig. The invaders are counting upon being in the city on the 19th. Meanwhile the French are beginning to make a show of a successful resistance.

The French Government at Tours has issued an official decree, postponing the elections for members of a Constituent Assembly until France is free from invaders. The Germans publish a proclamation which they say fell into their hands by the capture of a balloon from Paris, in which the Government of "National Defense" declares the decree of the Government at Tours referring an election opposed to that of the Government of National Defense, which alone is binding. The elections, they add, are adjourned until it is possible to hold them throughout the Republic. Great hopes are entertained of the new French Armies forming. ALEX. GLAIS-BIZOIN, of the National Defense Committee, in a letter to his constituents, declining a re-election, speaks enthusiastically of them. He says that 600,000 men will soon be ready to march to the deliverance of Paris. GARIBALDI has reached Tours, where he arrived sooner than he was anticipated. His presence, as soon as known, created great excitement. He made a short speech to the France Tireurs, in which he said that he should meet them on the battle-field to aid France of the invaders.

A dispatch from Ham, near St. Quentin, says that the Prefect of St. Quentin succeeded in arousing the inhabitants to resist the Prussians menacing the town, and arming them from the gun-shops, defended temporary barricades for five hours, and finally repulsed the Prussians, who retired to Elhemont. Prussian scouts are reappearing in the region about Orleans. The Prussians have opened fire on Neu-Brisach, one of the strongest fortified towns in Eastern France, the place having refused to surrender. Fires have broken out within the town, but the besieged vigorously answer the cannonading of the enemy. Sharp fighting on Friday between Raon l'Etape and Bruyères, in the Department of Vosges, is reported. It lasted all day, and, according to French dispatches, the French received the platoons which the Germans had attempted to carry a number of pieces. A Carlsruhe dispatch contains an account of a French defeat sustained at Strassy, the French flying toward Rambervillers. This seems to be the locality between Bruyères and Raon l'Etape, or the conflict in which the French claim to have held their ground.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

The Discussion, newspaper, at Madrid, doubts the assertion of the Ministry that the abolition of slavery has been enforced or officially announced in Cuba, and says that measures have been taken to expose the fraud....The Naval Committee of Inquiry in the loss of the Captiva have rendered a verdict exonerating everybody from blame.

GENERAL.

There is a rumor from China that Prince Kung has been murdered.

Reports from Natal, South Africa, speak of a grand rush to the diamond region on the Vaal River.

The Secretary of the Treasury has just issued a circular giving notice of the terms and conditions on which subscriptions will be received for the new loan under the act for re-funding the national debt.

Miss ETTA E. BARSTOW, a school teacher of Canton, Mass., died, on Saturday, from the effects of an assault made upon her with stones by four of her pupils. The young ruffians have been arrested.

Mrs. CELIA BICKFORD and her son, aged ten, were found dead in bed, on Saturday morning, at Haverhill, Mass., with their throats cut. The woman appears to have killed her boy and then committed suicide.

Rev. JAMES S. GREEN, alias Rev. M. M. Cumston, was arrested at Middletown, Conn., Saturday, on a charge of committing forgeries in Indiana to the amount of $20,000.

CORNELIUS WENDELL, it appears, is not yet dead, but there is little hope of his recovery.

BRIGHAM YOUNG, on Saturday, resigned the position of Trustee of the Mormon Church, and also that of President of the Perpetual Emigration Fund.

The receipts of the Industrial Exhibition at Cincinnati, last week, were $14,000, and the aggregate attendance 36,000 persons.

The latest advices from the Red River region show that the French half-breeds still display a disposition to create disturbance, and considerable apprehension prevails in the country.

The fourth annual conference of the Mormon Church is now in session at Salt Lake City.

Some Probable Results of Re-electing Gov. Hoffman.

It is highly important for the people of this State to consider what will be the probable effect of reappointing Mr. TWEED'S agent as Governor. It may be admitted that the inhabitants of New-York would be the greatest sufferers, but there is no portion of the State in which honest men can afford to look on unconcerned at the corruption and demoralization which the Tweed gang have introduced into the whole framework of Government. Good citizens everywhere have the deepest interest in seeing that the hands of our Judges are not soiled with bribes. They ought to resent with all their might that deliberate tampering with the Judiciary of which Gov. HOFFMAN has been guilty. When the Courts of Justice are in the hands of the spoilers, everybody must see, or ought to see, that the emergency is one calling for the prompt interference of the people. Property in no part of the State can be deemed safe when we have a Governor who aids and abets men like TWEED and FISK in all their schemes, and does it in his interesting character of political tapeworm. Political corruption may be withstood, but when that is allied with corruption by the Judiciary, it would be very difficult to say what rights inherent in a free community are beyond the reach of danger.

In the first place, it is quite clear that the re-election of Gov. HOFFMAN would put new life-blood into the infamous "Ring," which, hitherto, has only been able to find equally infamous champions. The World alone comes to the rescue of this gang, and we are far from denying that the work is appropriate to it, although it has once before forgotten the obligation expressed in the adage, "honor among thieves." It has done nothing for the Democrats but betray them at all sorts of critical moments, and its advice has invariably tended to lead the party further than ever from power. There is not a Democrat in the State who does not know that the World is apt to turn traitor at the most important crisis of the fight. If the "Young Democracy" were even now to pay it a little more than the "Ring" has done, it would at once set to work "blackguarding" its present employers, and tear the hands which are feeding it. It would therefore be a waste of time to discuss anything which the World has to say on the present contest, even if we were not too busy at this moment arguing against swindlers and Jeremy Diddlers to hold any argument with them. The real question for the people to consider is, ought a set of plunderers, who are defended only by the World, to be re-elected to power behind their stalking-horse, Gov. HOFFMAN? Does this community, as a body, approve of the long series of frauds which have been perpetrated in connection with Erie stock, or of the system of blackmailing now in force in this City under the disguise of "Government," or of the deliberate corruption of the Judiciary, which every man at the Bar knows to have been practiced? If the community does approve of these things, then, of course, it cannot do better than vote for Gov. HOFFMAN on the 8th of next month. It will adopt a certain method of increasing these vast abuses and scandals.

The Fiskian cogies will then proceed with all the improvements which the peculiar taste and ingenuity of their originator can suggest. The streets will probably be enlivened by whole processions of six-in-hands, containing the humble creatures who minister to the enjoyments of that great judge-maker, FISK, Jr. Mr. TWEED will pass his week-days, as well as his Sundays, in drinking punch, in what the World calls his "palatial stables"—"an employment," says that same journal, "so much more innocuous than his usual course of life, that perhaps we ought to congratulate him on his improvement." The World, which eats the man's salt, would not speak this way of him, we may be very sure, if he did not richly deserve it. Mr. TWEED'S gains from the public purse have certainly been enormous. His own organ said, on March 31, that he "swindled the public" to the extent of those gains, and that he was a bankrupt when he took to the trade of politics. We all know that he has a house in Fifth-avenue worth $300,000, with a fountain in front, as an emblem of the perpetual flow of money from the public purse, by which the property was acquired and is kept up. Each horse in his stables is said to be allotted ten feet of room—whereas there are many thousands of the poorer class of tax-payers, rendering tribute to TWEED, who would be only too glad if they had half ten feet for themselves and their children. If these poor tax-payers wish to perpetuate the reign of TWEED, they, too, cannot do better than vote for him, through his factotum, Gov. HOFFMAN, at the coming election. It will inevitably be one result of Mr. HOFFMAN'S re-election that the Tweed exchequer will be liberally replenished, and that innumerable jobs, which are at present being held back, will be pushed on rapidly to a delightful consummation. The public do not yet half understand the powers of absorption possessed by Mr. TWEED and his immediate friends. They will have a better opportunity of judging after the election, if they do not take care to put an honest man in the chair which Gov. HOFFMAN now occupies.

There is nothing to be set down on the other side of the account. No one can point out a single advantage which the public can possibly derive from the continuance of the reign of these spurious Democrats. We should have increased taxation, wholesale frauds at elections, a persistent degradation of the Judiciary, the public property placed at the mercy of an unscrupulous gang, and no redress of any wrong, small or great, possible to any man who is not included within the magic circle of the "Ring." These are not probabilities—they are certainties. Is the public willing to endure these immeasurable evils?—above all, is it willing to place the burden once more upon its own back, when it has a very fair chance of shaking it off? Look at the situation. The Democratic "Ring" is torn by internal dissensions. It has incurred the just indignation of large classes of the people. The opportunity is favorable for dealing it a deadly blow, and it is one of those invaluable chances which may not recur for some years to come. Is there any excuse, then, for any honest citizen to refrain from doing all that lies within his power to abolish the Tweed gang? What work half so useful is to be done in the present day as this? Some people, who are never satisfied, may say, "We do not like the Republican candidate." Let us ask such persons plainly, how do they like being governed by a set of men whom we will not compare to footpads, for fear of doing injustice to the footpads?

The French Financial Position.

Should France be amerced in the sums computed by German calculators as the cost, on their side, of the war, the French national debt must be very largely increased. This debt, before the war, amounted in our money to about twenty-six hundred millions of dollars. The Germans say the expense of the campaign to themselves will come to the equivalent of one thousand millions of dollars more. To France the cost down to the present time—including a reasonable estimate for towns and villages burned, bridges blown up, and railways, standing crops, and other property destroyed—must be nearly double that sum. If we reckon it at fourteen hundred millions, add the compensation to be paid to Germany, and add both to the national debt, we have an aggregate of five thousand millions of dollars. This vast amount exceeds the hugest national burden known to history. That of Great Britain, at the worst time, has been far below it. At present the English debt is less than four thousand millions, and this is funded at so low a rate of interest as to make the pressure comparatively light. Besides, small as England is, her vast colonies have assisted her immensely in carrying a load declared, over and over again, in past times, to be beyond her strength. France, without colonies of material productiveness available for such a purpose, will be called upon, then, by the adjustment proposed, to endure a debt a third greater that the monstrous obligations of England in 1814.

But even this does not measure the extent of the French misfortune. The weight of such a debt might be crushing enough for the whole Empire in its integrity. It is, however, proposed to inflict it upon a dismembered France, a territory diminished by six departments, and more than three millions of people. Alsace and Lorraine, including the Upper and Lower Rhine, the Meuse, the Vosges, the Moselle and the Meurthe would have no part in sustaining the burden. These departments have been accustomed to pay freely in support of their government. A correspondent writes of an old Alsatian peasant, in his shovel-hat, looped up on one side, and short jacket, expressing his opinion very concisely, but with indefinite iteration, "Whoever has Hundsbach has me. Whether the French or the Prussians have Alsace all is one to me. Whoever has it, the peasant will have to pay the taxes, which are heavy enough." But these heavy taxes will no longer, as proposed, go to Paris, but to Berlin. Thus, all things considered, France will not only have the heaviest debt in the world to stagger under, but will possess from eight to twelve per cent. fewer shoulders than before to uphold it. It is this consideration, apart from national pride, which weighs so severely on MM. FAVRE, THIERS, and the rest who have been representing the new-born Republic. To accept such terms would look like, if it did not positively amount to, destruction. The democratic leaders, clearly, dare not assent to them. Yet no alternative is open to them but the terrible one of an indefinite continuation of the war. And it will be a poor consolation to those who support the Republic, in the event of continued disaster, to reflect that King WILLIAM would probably grant better terms to the Empire.

The truth is that the double penalty of dismemberment and paying the German expenses of the war is more than any Government dare propose to the French people, if indeed, it would not be too heavy for their strength. It is true that prognostications about non-ability to bear a given debt are often disproved, but such precedents hardly justify indefinite expansion. Many insisted, in 1865, that the public liabilities of the United States could never be redeemed. Some of our friends of the Democratic Party were loudest in this assertion—the same gentlemen who now urge that we are paying the debt too fast. But this prospective debt of France is more than double what ours was at its highest point, to say nothing of the difference of area and annual rate of populative increase, which establish a still wider contrast in the relative situations. Besides this, a nation finished with victory works faster and better than a nation humiliated by defeat—a consideration not too sentimental, we conceive, to be taken into account. A careful survey of all the features of the case ought, we may suppose, to lead the sober-minded Germans to moderate the rigor of demands which from their point of view may seem just in themselves. It is a dangerous thing to exact either the impossible, or that which to average eyes looks like the impossible. To press for too much sometimes ends in the loss of all. No nation has ever stood in a more magnificent attitude than Germany now stands with relation to an aggressive enemy. Her moral superiority will rise to the level of her physical superiority should she abstain from imposing on France terms of peace that may appear impracticable as well as shameful.

Soldiers' Luxuries.

The Prussian Army is just now acknowledged to be splendidly organized, if it is not the finest body of soldiers in the world. It becomes interesting, therefore, to consider any points in which its organization or management differs from our own. One very noticeable point is the freedom with which stimulants are supplied to the German troops. In our war, the Sanitary Commission and the various relief societies administered most abundantly to the physical wants of the soldiers, but they were never given liquor except when prescribed by a physician. Everybody knew that the soldiers drank whisky when they could get it, but nobody looked upon this habit other than as one of the demoralizing influences of war. Without attempting to deny this proposition, it is worth while to consider what the Prussians think about this matter. A trustworthy correspondent informs that within twenty days, at the commencement of the war, 151,000 men passed through Berlin. The Committee which furnished them with refreshments as they passed through that city, also served out to them 5,100 bottles of wine, 110,600 large glasses of beer, 2,800 bottles of seltzer water and three casks per day, 420 bottles lemonade, 64 bottles of Jamaica rum, 256,000 cigars, and 20,500 packages of tobacco. There was no lack of stimulants, therefore, although the demand was large. The natural tendency of Germans to beer and wine drinking will doubtless explain why the Committee supplied these articles in such abundance, but there is a still more astonishing fact to be considered.

The correspondent from whom we have already quoted says the Prussian Government "considers brandy an excellent drink for the army in the field, and even compels every soldier to fill his flask before he leaves camp." These flasks hold more than an ordinary claret bottle, and yet it seems that no evil effects have been observed from this extraordinary ration. The Germans do not ordinarily drink much brandy, so that it may be safe to trust them with it, but it would have been a dangerous experiment to try with most of the soldiers who recently fought in our immense army. It was customary, however, to issue an extra ration of whisky to men who had been unusually exposed, or who had been on fatigue duty, such as making roads or intrenchments. Whisky and quinine were also occasionally issued when the army was operating in malarial districts. As the soldiers were constantly exposed to the weather, and often drenched to the skin, these extra rations often did much good. Who could blame the commander of any of the troops who were exposed to such a rain as that of a recent day, if upon their return to camp, he had ordered a ration of whisky served out to the men? Yet soldiers are constantly liable to be exposed to just such storms as they then had to encounter, with no more protection than an ordinary shelter tent can afford. Still, although liquor is sometimes supplied to our soldiers, the army is practically managed on temperance principles, so far as the Government is concerned. It is true that during the war our soldiers often did drink to excess, but it was almost invariably when they were on furlough, or in the vicinity of great cities. In view, however, of the avidity with which our men drank liquor when they could get it, this issue of brandy to the Prussians seems most incomprehensible. Not only do King WILLIAM'S armies have liquor supplied to them freely, but they are also great consumers of tobacco. We all see how devoted our German fellow-citizens are to their pipes, and their brethren now bearing arms in Europe are no less fond of smoking. In fact, the Prussian soldiers are said to almost live on tobacco. The Uhlans are always seen with pipes in their mouths, and when these dashing cavalrymen enter a town or village, their first requisition is for a supply of cigars and tobacco. We are not informed whether the Prussians are as much addicted to the use of coffee as they are to beer-drinking and smoking, but from what we know of their countrymen, we judge they are. In this regard, however, they are likely to go ahead of our own soldiers. Coffee seems to be as necessary to an American soldier as bread. Any one who saw a bivouac during the last war will remember how particular the soldiers were each morning to make and drink their cup of coffee before doing anything else. It seemed to satisfy and give them strength more than any other food or beverage, and yet none of them seemed to feel bad effects from drinking it as often as even three times a day. Stimulants, therefore, of some kind seem to be a necessity with soldiers—not alcohol necessarily, but stimulating food or drink nevertheless. It is for medical men to decide just what these stimulants should be, and how they should be administered. The want is evident, and it is a part of wise army government to meet and supply the need in such a way as to secure a benefit for the soldier, instead of allowing him to undermine his strength and health in carousing and unbridled license.

Chinese Coolie Mutinies.

Advices from Honolulu, under date of September 2, state that two vessels well-known in connection with the nefarious system for which Macao has earned an unenviable notoriety—the Dolores Ugarte and Lewis Cassard—had arrived in port, one in a state of chronic mutiny which had rendered the voyage a "scene of horror." The abominations of which this state of affairs is the legitimate result, have for some years been protested against by the China Press, and the Chinese Government has fulminated ineffectual edicts without number against the Portuguese man-stealers and dealers in kidnapped Chinese. But ship-loads are still sent from China to Peru under circumstances but little less abominable than formerly. Kidnapping, pure and simple, has, indeed, become too unsafe to be largely resorted to in the immediate neighborhoods which formerly furnished the majority of victims; but a scarcely less objectionable mode of procuring them is now pursued, by employing crimps who inveigle desirable-looking parties into binding themselves over as "emigrants" for a term of years.

The usual method is to advance money for gambling purposes to the unhappy dupes, who invariably lose, to their newly-found friend or his accomplices, the sum advanced. The day of reckoning comes, and the money so easily lost cannot be replaced. The Chinese are, to do them justice, most scrupulous in paying debts of honor; and the idea of pawning their liberty to satisfy such claims is by no means novel. The debtors are therefore prepared for the proposition that they should bind themselves to serve as laborers abroad for a term of years, the money lent to be repaid from the advances given them on presentation at the coolie depot. They are then forwarded, under the care of trustworthy agents, to the port of embarkation. Their convoys contrive in all cases to fleece them pretty thoroughly before they reach their destination, claiming the balance of their advance for "subsistence." The emigrants from Macao, who are thus mostly emigrants by force, leave under circumstances widely different from those which attend the embarkation at Hong Kong of coolies destined for the United States. In this case all that official supervision can do to suppress fraud is done. At Macao the Government winks at such irregularities, being afraid to jeopardize the large income it derives from the capitation tax imposed upon coolie emigrants.

The treatment accorded to the latter upon arrival in Peru is that of slaves rather than emigrants. Their contracts are frequently sold to the highest bidder, who will in turn resell them for a term of years, irrespective of the time which the emigrants may have agreed to serve. Thousands have died amid the guano fields of the Chincha Islands. Hundreds have been reported by eye-witnesses to have been flogged, branded, and cast out in the streets to die. Such being the case, is there anything to wonder at in "coolie mutinies," so often recorded? The whole system is disgraceful to the Government which permits them to be shipped, and that under whose flag they land. It is certainly time that civilized Governments expostulated with the authorities of these petty States, who derive an income from a traffic in flesh and blood which is even more abominable than the African slave-trade, inasmuch as it covers up cruelty in the garb of philanthropy. John Chinaman is, perhaps, in no way an angel; but he has rights which all calling themselves Christians and civilized should be bound to respect. When this is acknowledged, we shall not so frequently have to record the occurrence of coolie mutinies.

Our Modern Pretorians.

In the stately pages of GIBBON we read how the Pretorian Guard ruled a degenerated Rome, and made and unmade Emperors. We read of their domineering insolence, and of the abject submission of the people, with a wonder akin to contempt, and, perhaps, with a little secret exultation that we have fallen on better days. But when, a few years hence, the historical perspective comes to sharpen our vision, we may possibly find occasion to revise this opinion. We shall see, then, it may be, that the New-York of today is ruled by a Pretorian Guard whose exactions and insolence would put their Roman predecessors to the blush. If we look around us now with eyes purged of conventional prejudices, we may recognize at every corner these redoubtable legionaries. We shall find them under various aspects and in diverse forms. As hackmen whose happy fortune it is to transport municipal magnates on expensive journeys, as cartmen employed in carrying to and fro unnecessary materials for purposeless ends, as superfluous laborers engaged to sun themselves in cheerful idleness on public works, as chair-makers furnishing at enormous profits the seats of public stations, as Deputy Sheriffs and Court Marshals, as ushers for civic dignitaries, as clerks and deputy clerks, and assistant deputies and deputy assistants adorning our public offices, all fatten on the public treasury, and are doing the minimum of service at the maximum of wages, our Pretorians meet us at every step and watch over our coming and our going. But then, we must be content to pay for the privilege of knowing the great. If we meet them nowhere else we shall be secure of encountering them at the polls, when, armed cap-à-pie, with much more effective weapons than the pike and short sword of their prototypes, they assemble to guard the liberties of the commonwealth. Then, when our election is over, we shall see them gather in great array like an army with banners, and many lights, and seek the presence of Augustus Cæsar TWEED. There the spoils will be divided and the pæans of victory sung, and our Pretorians dismissed to their pastimes with the imperial benediction.

We do not know if our worthy "Imperator" is in the habit of reading GIBBON. But if he is, he cannot have failed to notice that the Pretorians were as capricious as they were greedy and cruel. Some day, when the delights of pistolling policemen and nocturnal affrays have become tame, they may grow restive under even his benign sway, and cast about them for his successor. Is he prepared for that evil day? Will he surrender the City to pacify his masters, while he sits fiddling on the top of his palace? Will he surrender his neck to the sword like another unhappy JULIAN OF PERTINAX, or will he ignominiously fly to the soft security of his Greenwich retreat? The ominous revolt of the Young Democracy may be only the forerunner of impending ruin. Greedy eyes perhaps even now look longingly on his millions, and eager hands are itching for them. It will be well for him to be on his guard, for the life of an usurper is always short, and it may be that the hour of reckoning even for TWEED is near at hand.

The use of balloons by the French has so far worked well. Several parties have escaped from Paris by this rather hazardous mode of conveyance, and so far we have not heard of any failures. An interesting account is given in our news columns this morning relative to the safe journey of two Americans from the beleaguered city. The impression seems to be that Paris can hold out until it is starved out, and how long that may be seems to depend to a certain extent on the available supply of horses. It is not so very long ago that the Parisians were trying to persuade the world that horse-flesh was more nutritious and palatable than the flesh of any other animal. We hope for their own sakes that they were right. They will, as any rate, be called upon to give the experiment a very full trial.

Among the papers to be read before the National Congress which assembles in Cincinnati to-morrow, to discuss the subject of prison discipline, is one by EDWIN HILL, of London, on the "absolute dependence of the criminal class on the co-operation of certain capitalists, and the possibility of extinguishing the criminal class by compelling the withdrawal of such co-operation." This is a very suggestive topic for an essay, and would be doubtless entirely pertinent when treating of the criminal class of London or Cincinnati; but if the writer were a resident of this City, he would soon see the necessity of changing the title of his paper so as to make it read thus: "The absolute dependence of the criminal class on the co-operation of the Tammany Hall Ring—their Magistrates, Judges and prosecuting officers—and the possibility of extinguishing the criminal class by the defeat of Gov. HOFFMAN at the coming election, and the consequent withdrawal of such co-operation."

If we may judge of English public opinion from the views recently expressed by Mr. BRUCE, the Home Secretary, we may safely conclude that the people are delighted with their position and prospects. It is a blessed thing that France is weakened, because that removes one danger from England. It is also a blessed thing that Prussia is weakening herself very fast, because hereafter she can stand in nobody's way. An invasion of England is, it appears, out of the question, because there are 180,000 volunteers always ready to repel the enemy. And so in this fool's Paradise the people are well contented to live, and meanwhile amuse themselves with a "Comic Album of the War," which finds a ready sale in the streets. On this side the Atlantic we have not yet been able to discover the comic side of a bloody war, but then we may not be such humorists as the English.

Would it not be well for the Citizens' Association to hold another general meeting of all its members to investigate the management of that concern? Such a meeting was held in April last, at which a half-hearted sort of indorsement of the agents was issued. These agents had fallen into disrepute with the public, owing to the acceptance by their head man, SAYRE, of a fat office under the Ring. Since that time two more of their agents, HENRY and DALY, have followed the example of their chief, and accepted office at the hands of their old enemies. The public hears no more from the Citizens' Association about the corruptions of the City Government, though everybody knows that corruption was never so rife as now. It is worse than useless for Mr. SAYRE to revive a series of resolutions passed last April. His character needs more recent vouchers. If the Citizens' Association would not make itself appear more contemptible in the eyes of the public than it is now, let it hold a general meeting and appoint new officers without delay.

At the very outset of the campaign, and in the first speech that he made after receiving his nomination for Governor, Gen. WOODFORD made the most serious charge against Gov. HOFFMAN that could be brought against any man running as a candidate for office. He charged him with having been elected two years ago by frauds, and with being enabled to write himself Governor of the State of New-York to-day only by means of those frauds. He further offered, if Gov. HOFFMAN would take the platform with him, and go before the people, to prove his charge to be true. In this offer he only followed the example of Gov. HOFFMAN himself, who, when he was a candidate, and Gov. FENTON was in the Gubernatorial chair, gave a similar challenge to his opponent. Yet this serious charge against Gov. HOFFMAN remains unanswered to this day, either by the Governor or any of his friends, and the offer to prove it remains unaccepted.

Mayor HALL is so fond of a pleasant jest that it is not always easy to tell when he is in earnest. The most preposterous thing—supposing it to be anything else than a joke—which has been done or suggested in the campaign thus far, is his proposition to Gen. FRANCHOT to arrange a private arbitration to try certain charges brought against Gen. WOODFORD when he was Lieutenant-Governor. Imagine Gov. HOFFMAN consenting to any such "arbitration" upon the far more damaging charges made against him as Governor! Mayor HALL must think that Gen. WOODFORD is even a weaker man than the Democratic papers represent him to be, to take any notice of so irrational a proposition. Gen. FRANCHOT returned the only answer which the Mayor's note admitted of. He told him that he had made his charges against Gen. WOODFORD to the people in a public speech, and that the people formed the proper tribunal before which to try them; that Gen. WOODFORD had already offered to prove the falsity of the charges before that tribunal, if his opponent, Gov. HOFFMAN, would father them, and meet him face to face on the platform. So long as that offer remains unaccepted, the less notice Mayor HALL or his friends make about his charges, the better.

The Indians of the Prairies seem to think they do not die fast enough, by fire-water, small-pox, and the rifles of the white man. Predatory warfare among themselves has been among their immemorial traditions, and thinned and scattered as they are, they still return at brief intervals to the old strife. The latest outbreak has been in Dakota, between the Sioux and the Mandans, and from the accounts just received in Washington from the Governor of that Territory, the fight at Cheyenne is likely to be followed by prolonged hostilities. In a few years more the faces of the original owners of the soil will be as rare on the prairie as for a generation they have been on the Eastern sea-board, and the sad prophesies which the most intelligent of their number share with observers of the intruding race will be verified. The people who within three centuries possessed the whole of this vast continent will be practically extinct.

WASHINGTON.

President Grant and the Missouri Republicans—Secretary Cox and the Assessment of Site Clerks—An Old Case Under the Neutrality Laws—Refunding the National Debt—An Important Treasury Circular—Various Matters.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9.—Inasmuch as the effort is being made to place the President in a position of hostility to revenue reform, because he sympathizes with the regular Republican organization in Missouri, it is proper to say that this pretended issue of revenue reform is an after-thought entirely; and that the bolt in that State had no reference to it. A large number of revenue reform Republicans are supporting the regular ticket, and there have been no appeals to the President in behalf of that ticket by protectionists as such. The President became cognizant of the intention of the Brown faction to bolt as early as August, when he visited St. Louis. That faction would have been regular if it could have controlled the Convention, but preferred to be irregular when it found it could not. The statement that there is any division in the Cabinet on the course of the President in regard to Missouri is pure invention. Right or wrong, they are of one mind on the subject, and reprobate the bolt.

SECRETARY COX AND THE ASSESSMENT OF CLERKS.

The position of Secretary COX, upon the subject of assessing clerks for party purposes, seems never to have been fairly stated. In his interview with the representatives of the Congressional Committee, the Secretary said that he did not like the tone of their circular, and he especially objected to the implied threat which it contained. While he would like to have every man in the department give, according to his means, he objected decidedly to the system of horizontal assessments, as he knew some of the clerks were not able to contribute much without distressing their families. He desired his subordinates to act voluntarily in such matters, and if they acted in good faith toward the party it should not work to their disadvantage, while he remained in office. Secretary COX will return on Tuesday, and the reports about his retirement from the Cabinet will probably be put an end to, one way or the other, before the close of the week.

The President will visit the Maryland State Fair, at Frederick, to-morrow, leaving here in the morning and returning in the evening. He will be accompanied by Postmaster-General CRESWELL, and perhaps other members of the Cabinet.

A CASE UNDER THE NEUTRALITY LAWS.

A case involving the doctrine asserted in the second proclamation of neutrality issued yesterday, occurred during the rebellion. The British Government had issued a proclamation in similar terms, when the rebel war steamer Georgia entered the port of Liverpool, ostensibly for the purpose of repairs. Instead of being repaired she was sold to a Liverpool merchant and subsequently chartered for the Portuguese mail service. While in this capacity she was captured by one of our cruisers as prize of war. The Prize Court gave judgment for the vessel on the ground of neutral ownership, but the case being taken to the Supreme Court, Mr. ASHTON, for the Government, held that as the status of the vessel in port which enabled the sale to be effected, was in violation of the neutral obligations of the British Government, the sale was therefore void, and the vessel a legal prize. The Court sustained this view, holding that a legal sale could not be made in contemplation of law, and the vessel was condemned.

CORNELIUS WENDELL NOT DEAD.

The announcement of the death of Hon. CORNELIUS WENDELL, yesterday, seems to have been premature, but the latest intelligence of his condition leaves hardly anyhope of his recovery.

Second—Subscribers for equal amounts of each class of bonds. Third—Subscribers for five per cent. bonds according to the per cent. of premium offered, or at par in the order of the date of subscribing. LOCAL POLITICS.

The City and County Tickets—The Ring Fright About Controller.

The Anti-Ring Party, including what is known as the "Young Democracy," are to meet in convention this evening, to nominate their ticket for City and county officers. They will be the first in the field with their candidates, and if they nominate good men and are supported, as they will deserve to be, by the independent voters of all parties who are not under the Tammany yoke, they will be first in the race in November. The City and county officers to be elected at the next election are a Mayor, a Sheriff, a County Clerk and a Controller. The Tammany Ringsters have themselves to blame that they had not the Controllership fixed for the next four years by the clause which they cunningly smuggled into the Tax Levy, taking the election of that official away from the people, and authorizing Mayor HALL to appoint one of their own gang, but they have discovered, to their great mortification, that the trick won't stand law. It is said that they have consulted CHARLES O'CONOR on the legal point, and pretend to have got from him a semi-endorsement of their fraud on the rights of the people; but they don't venture to publish his opinion, and, if they did, it would not settle the point. If CHARLES O'CONOR has given it as his legal opinion that the charter of the City of New-York can be altered, amended or radically changed by a clause inserted in a Tax Levy, without the knowledge of a dozen members of the Legislature who had adopted the charter two weeks before, the only thing to be said about it is that CHAR. O'CONOR differs widely in opinion from lawyers equally learned and equally eminent with himself. At any rate the Tammany Ring are not willing to trust Mr. O'CONOR's opinion, even if it be in their favor, and it reported on the best authority, that they intend to run a candidate for Controller at the next election. They hoped to keep the thing dark till the day before election, the same as they did last Fall in the matter of the Mayoralty, and then run a candidate and elect him by default. But that trick won't bear repetition. The opposition to the Tammany Ring are fully aware of their designs this Fall and prepared to thwart them. If "Slippery Dick," as the late JOHN VAN BUREN very appropriately named Controller CONNOLLY, expects to retain his office for another term, he has got to do it by a popular vote, and not by a legislative trick intended to cheat the people out of their rights. If he can get more votes than ANDREW H. GREEN on the 8th of November he will still be permitted to hold the purse-strings of the City for the benefit of the Ring; otherwise not.

The time for holding the Ring County Convention is not yet fixed; but their ticket was already made out months ago, the same as it was at their State Convention. The Convention will only meet to ratify the decree of TWEED, SWEENY & Co., and say that HALL is nominated for Mayor, Jerome Quinn for County Clerk, Mr. BARNARD for Sheriff, and CONNOLLY for Controller. All, with the exception of the candidate for Sheriff, who is not allowed by law to run twice in succession, are renominated, thus showing the Ring's love for the old Democratic doctrine of "rotation in office," the same way it was shown at Rochester.

As for the Republican Party, it is to be hoped that they will be guided in their action on City and county officers by the dictates of reason and common sense, and not by an only half-cooked by a few interested parties about running a "straight-out party ticket." No such ticket has the remotest chance of being elected under any circumstances, and what the Republican Party and all good citizens need now, above all things else, is to break up the corrupt "Ring" that now rules the City with an iron rod, and which hopes to retain its power in the State and ultimately to get control of the National Treasury at Washington.

Fourth Assembly District Soldiers and Sailors.

A regular meeting of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Republican Association of the Fourth Assembly District was held Friday evening. A crowded and most respectable audience was present at No. 4 East Broadway, and interesting addresses were made by Dr. H. POWELL, Mr. TEACY, and others. The following was adopted:

Resolved, That the Soldiers and Sailors' Association of the Fourth Assembly District unite with the Irish Republican Association of the District, for the purpose of getting up a mass meeting to ratify the Republican nominations of this State.

JAMES MURRAY is President of the Association, WM. G. CLARK, Corresponding Secretary, and FRANK C. HOPKINS, Recording Secretary.

AMUSEMENTS.

Musical and Theatrical.

ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR TO-NIGHT.

An unusual variety of choice entertainments is promised by the theatrical notices of the day. Musically, the event of greatest interest will be the last Nilsson Concert, at Steinway Hall. For lovers of the drama, the first performance of "The Two Roses," at Wallack's, and the début of Mlle. JANAUSCHEK on the English stage, at the Academy, will be most important. The myriad admirers of equestrian entertainments will be satisfied to hear that the New-York Circus is to be reopened this evening. LOTTA is to act in "Little Nell and the Marchioness," at Niblo's. "Major du Boots" and the burlesque of "Le Somnambule" are to be brought out at Lina Edwin's, with the co-operation of Miss ELIZA WEATHERBEE. At the Fourteenth-street Theatre, Mme. RAVENACH will repeat her performance of Jane Eyre. The programmes at the other houses are unchanged.

GOTTSCHALK CONCERTS.

The series of concerts which Misses CELESTINE, CLARA and BLANCHE GOTTSCHALK intend to give, will be begun by them, at Association Hall, on Wednesday next. Miss BLANCHE GOTTSCHALK is the songstress of the trio, her sisters being pianists. All have dwelt some years in London, where their talent has been appreciated, and has been referred to by the Press in very complimentary terms. The chance of listening to an interpretation of GOTTSCHALK's compositions by persons whose temperaments, kindred to that of the dead artist, may recall some portion of the charm under which he held his hearers, is not likely to pass unheeded. Until now the spirit of his works, departed with the master's touch, has not been summoned back. The Misses GOTTSCHALK are to be assisted by Signor GUSTAVUS HALL, baritone, and by M. J. F. PRUME, violinist.

THE BURTON DRAMATIC ASSOCIATION.

The Burton Dramatic Association was reorganized Friday evening, the occasion being the twentieth anniversary of the original formation of the society. Performances will be given monthly.

MISS GLYN IN BOSTON.

The first reading in Boston of Miss ISABELLA GLYN, seems to have been, so far as we can judge from the local Press, highly successful. The Traveller thus ushers in its notice of the occasion:

ISABELLA GLYN'S READINGS.—Mrs. DALLAS, better known by her maiden name of ISABELLA GLYN, commenced a series of Shakespearian readings in the Tremont Temple, last evening. The audience, which was not very large, was numbered many notables, such as HENRY W. LONGFELLOW, JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, JAMES T. FIELDS, JOSIAH QUINCY and others. Last night's reading demonstrated that Miss GLYN, while not near so good a reader—not near so accomplished an elocutionist as Mrs. FANNY KEMBLE—is a very far ahead of that lady as an actress. In this respect, Miss GLYN is, like FECHTER, realistic, and she points every word with an appropriate gesture, or an intelligent glance:

"Speech, language in her eye, her cheek, her lip.
Nay, her foot speaks."

In her interpretation of the various characters of the drama, her great and unequivocal success was with that of Cleopatra, and this part Miss GLYN seems to have made peculiarly her own. If we may say any fault to find with the delineation, it would be that there were times when the character was made somewhat too childish—more after the manner of the maiden of bashful fifteen, than of the matured woman who was "wrinkled deep in time;" but that aside the conception was a most extraordinary one, and on the stage, where full away could be afforded, Miss GLYN's interpretation would indeed prove a grand piece of acting. The best single effort of the evening, perhaps, was the reading of the fifth scene of the second act—the interview with the Messenger who brings tidings of the marriage of Antony with Octavia. In the early part of the scene her delivery of the lines—

"We'll to the river; there,
My music playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-finn'd fishes; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say, Ah, ha! you're caught."

was marked with exquisite grace and effect. Excellent, too, was the closing scene with the Messenger in the third of the third act. The death scene of the fifth act was most tenderly and delicately given; but perhaps the finest and most passionate burst of the night was the delivery of the speech in the third scene of the first act:

"Courteous lord, one word.
Sir, you and I must part—but that's not it;
Sir, you and I have lov'd—but that's not it;
Thou you know very well: Something it is I would—
O, my Oblivion is a very Antony,
And I am all forgotten."

The intense agony and despair thrown into the two last lines, and the appropriate gesture which accompanied them, were something remarkable.

The Boston Post speaks of Miss GLYN as follows:

"While her reading, as a whole, is indisputably the best we have had in Boston since Mrs. KEMBLE's, her impersonation of character is very superior. Gifted by nature with extraordinary vocal and physical powers, she can vary both voice and expression of countenance to an extent that insures the most perfect identification of various characters, as they progress in dramatic productions. Her strongest effort last evening, was in present conceptions in the fullness of her marked individuality and spirit; and in this her success was most complete. This may have arisen from a former performance of it upon the stage, or a keener perception of the character, or a love of the grand portrait as drawn by SHAKESPEARE. Whatever the key, it was as a whole, a great success, and those who listened to it, as did hundreds almost breathlessly, must have gathered new ideas and greater beauties than they had conceived before. As once the most charming and dangerous of her sex, Cleopatra was invested by Miss GLYN with intense and sustained interest. Antony was also finely shadowed forth. But we have neither space nor time to detail the manner in which each character was given. Exhausting as the evening's labor must have been, Miss GLYN retired from the platform, after reading nearly two hours and a half, with a freshness of voice and feeling that seemed quite unimpaired. During the evening she was frequently applauded with deserved heartiness. Miss GLYN reads while sitting, chiefly, but at times she rises to give significance and emphasis to a point under elaboration, or where an outburst of passion requiring the combined effort of voice and physique is to be evolved. Her power of facial expression is remarkable, and is an important in her success as a reader as it must be as an actress. She is a robust woman of the English type, and was arrayed in a costume which revealed a portion of her voluptuous figure.

From the Transcript we extract this passage:

"In a fine personal appearance, mobile features, eyes now flashing, now tender, and now despairing or sorrowful; a strong, well-toned and well-managed flexible voice, a little too chanted or hasty at times for clearest articulation, graceful bearing, easy, appropriate gestures and Kemble training, in all this the lady possesses gifts that mark her for an accomplished artist, and explain the popularity she has won at home.

'Antony and Cleopatra,' great as it is for imaginative power, and marvellous as it is for vivid force, is not a play for the reading desk; since it is wanting in diversity and in soliloquies; running throughout on a lofty level, whereon are shown the grand proportions of the two wonderful Shakespearean creations that give it not only its name, but its whole being. Hence, we may almost say that Miss GLYN's entire performance was an impersonation of the nervous, subtle, fiery, passionate, grandly constant, and as grandly deceitful, womanly, weak, and fiercely ambitious and power-loving Queen. It was the actress rather than the reader that appeared, and the actress clearly possessed, vigorously rendered, and quite thoroughly became the assumed character; the third act, the tragic passages, and the death scenes being especially thrilling in their veracity, their pathos, and their strange, fearful, intense solemnity."

The Journal compliments the lady in the following terms:

"We can only say that Miss GLYN fully sustains the high reputation she has brought to these shores. Her voice is full, clear and flexible, her gesticulation graceful, her enunciation excellent, and her manner mesmeric and full of dramatic force. If not equal to FANNY KEMBLE, an impartial comparison between the two would not redound to Miss GLYN's discredit. Indeed, the latter gives ample evidence of her Kemble pupilage, both in the matter of physical power, does not offer a great contrast to FANNY KEMBLE. There is as ever, some and yet a very ability in her style of reading that few possess, and we were at a loss whether to admire her rendition of the finer and subtler, or the more impassioned, passages of the play. She was frequently applauded, and the audience retired at the close apparently highly pleased with the rare treat afforded them."

Terrible Affray in Kentucky—Five Men Engage in a Fight and are all Killed or Dangerously Injured—Congress on Prison Discipline at Cincinnati.

CAIRO, Ill., Oct. 9.—A terrible and fatal affray occurred at Columbus, Ky., last evening. It appears that five men who had a difficulty a fortnight ago, met in town and proceeded to settle matters in a free fight, with the following result: SETH GIBSON was stabbed twice, and died instantly; GEORGE GIBSON was stabbed and dangerously wounded; — AUSTIN had his skull fractured by a club, and will probably die; — CONRAD was shot and wounded so dangerously that there is little hope of his recovery; — BROCKMAN was stabbed and terribly beaten, but he was taken to his home in the country, and the result of his injuries will probably never be known. The desperate nature of the encounter is shown by the fact that all those engaged were hors du combat in three minutes from the commencement of the affray.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 9.—The Ninth National Congress on Penitentiary and reformatory discipline will convene in this City on Wednesday forenoon. It will comprise representations from all parts of the United States, and from several nations in Europe. The discussions will embrace questions bearing on the moral, mental, and physical condition of the inmates of prisons, the professional training of officers, the construction of buildings, the obligations of society to reformed criminals, the exercise of executive clemency, and many questions touching the whole subject of prisons. Several hundred delegates are expected. There was a slight frost in the Highlands surrounding this city, last night.

The Mormon Conference at Salt Lake—Resignation of Brigham Young as Trustee in the Church.

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 9.—The great Mormon Conference has just ended. BRIGHAM YOUNG resigned yesterday his offices of Trustee in Trust of the Church and President of the Perpetual Fund. He gave as reasons that he was getting old and wanted to travel among the Saints, and did not wish to be harrassed with the vexatious law suits now threatened by apostates. He was furious against the courts. He was determined to resist every encroachment, and would destroy and burn everything, if need be, rather than submit to persecution.

SMITH & WELLS, his counsellors, resigned their offices to travel with him. The three are now only presidents of the church. These are great changes. The new trustee has not yet been made.

The Conference closed with BRIGHAM mildly preaching to the living to be baptized for the dead.

A good deal of excitement prevails in the city on many other matters.

GOV. HOFFMAN.

He Makes a Speech at Buffalo—Thankful for the Home Guard—His Sentiments on the Canal Policy.

BUFFALO, Oct. 9.—After the serenade to Gov. HOFFMAN at the residence of Gen. HOWARD, last night, his Excellency was loudly called for by the large assembly which had met to do him honor. In the course of his remarks he expressed thankfulness that there was one organization, the National Guard, which was free from the influence of political partisanship, an organization in which men of all nations, of all religions, of diverse political sentiments, of every calling could stand side by side as brothers and soldiers. In referring briefly to the canal policy which the State should pursue, he said it is our plain duty to induce, by every means at our command, the great West and North-west to pour into our State the great wealth of which they are the producers. To do this we must keep our water-ways open and free. Our canal transportation must be cheap, and no business should be set against the great commerce whose legitimate channel is through the Empire State. He said what interests one part of the State, interests the whole State and whatever flows into the regular channels of trade benefit alike the whole State and every part of it, and no citizen can be indifferent to that which so vitally effects the welfare and prosperity of the State in which he lives.

SUPERINTENDENT JOURDAN.

Fatal Termination of His Illness Probable—The Patient Reported in a Dying Condition—Shock of His Loss.

We regret to say that Mr. JOHN JOURDAN, the Superintendent of the Police Department of the City, is in a dying condition at his residence, No. 128 Prince-street, and he is not expected to live many hours.

A consultation was held yesterday by his physicians, in consequence of the alarmingly unfavorable condition of their patient, and they entertained no hope of his recovery. At 11 o'clock last night he was reported to be sinking rapidly, and his personal friends were telegraphed for. Among those were Justice BOOTLING, Ex-Senator MORGAN JONES, Warden FLAGGOM, of the City Prison, Captain KENNEDY, WALSH and KEYES, of the Police Department, and several other gentlemen.

Mr. JOURDAN was born in this City Jan. 6, 1827, of Irish parentage. He derived his education in the common schools of New-York, though his parents' circumstances compelled him to begin life early on his own account. Being a downtown resident, he fell into irregular employment in the morning paper offices as a folder, and finally became regularly engaged in the Tribune mail-room, strongly impressed a workman that his ability in her style of "reading" that few possess, and we were at a loss whether to admire her rendition of the finer and subtler, or the more impassioned, passages of the play. SUPERINTENDENT JOURDAN.

Fatal Termination of His Illness Probable—The Patient Reported in a Dying Condition—Shock of His Loss.

We regret to say that Mr. JOHN JOURDAN, the Superintendent of the Police Department of the City, is in a dying condition at his residence, No. 128 Prince-street, and he is not expected to live many hours.

A consultation was held yesterday by his physicians, in consequence of the alarmingly unfavorable condition of their patient, and they entertained no hope of his recovery. At 11 o'clock last night he was reported to be sinking rapidly, and his personal friends were telegraphed for. Among those were Justice BOOTLING, Ex-Senator MORGAN JONES, Warden FLAGGOM, of the City Prison, Captain KENNEDY, WALSH and KEYES, of the Police Department, and several other gentlemen.

Mr. JOURDAN was born in this City Jan. 6, 1827, of Irish parentage. He derived his education in the common schools of New-York, though his parents' circumstances compelled him to begin life early on his own account. Being a downtown resident, he fell into irregular employment in the morning paper offices as a folder, and finally became regularly engaged in the Tribune mail-room, strongly impressed a workman that his ability as a newspaper folder, only to give it up Oct. 11, 1863, when he was appointed on the new force and joined the Sixth Precinct under Capt. DOWLING, also reappointed. So well had he become known at headquarters, and so competent an officer, that the Board of Commissioners made him a Sergeant on the 24th of April, 1866, in which position he remained until Jan. 13, 1868, when he was appointed Captain of the Sixth Precinct, to fill the vacancy caused by Justice DOWLING's appointment to the Board of Police Magistrates. As Captain, Mr. JOURDAN added greatly to his reputation, and to him went a great deal of the business properly belonging to the Central Office. Merchants and others found him always ready and eager to take up a case, no matter how hopeless, and his detective force of men, under his orders, rarely failed to clear the most mysterious or puzzling case. He became so well acquainted with the criminal classes of this and other cities of the Union that it seemed easy for him to pick out the man who had committed the offense given him to investigate. Burglars and other desperate thieves came to fear him, and many of them owe to his efforts long terms in the various State prisons in the country. He always paid earnest attention to murder cases, and left no stone unturned to secure the criminal, and in nearly every instance the perpetrator of the crime was confounded in his presence, he succeeded in arresting the culprit. He was constantly catching some thief or burglar who had broken cover in some other precinct, frequently having the offender and his plunder before his neighboring Captain even knew the crime had been committed.

In important robberies where the amount of the property was very large, Mr. JOURDAN invariably distinguished himself. In 1866 he recovered $204,000 in money and bonds, that had been stolen from the St. Nicholas Hotel. In 1867, he directed the operations of five well-known detectives through whose agency, after a long Central Park, H. Bank robbers, and finally succeeded in arresting the prime mover in that celebrated burglary, besides recovering $210,000 of the stolen bonds and securities. He was also energetic in working, with Capt. DOWLING, of the Head-quarters Detective Squad, in the Lord Bond robbery, where nearly $3,000,000 were carried off, and he was mainly instrumental in recovering $135,000 worth of the plunder. He and others recovered $80,000 in bonds that had been stolen from the Royal Insurance, and $60,000 for the Mercantile Insurance Company of Memphis. In 1868 he worked up the Bowdoinham, Me., Bank robbery, and recovered $25,000.

During his career as a Police officer, he was remarkable for the clearness with which he prepared his cases, and so effectually paved the way for the District Attorneys that very few of his prisoners escaped conviction. As Captain, he was a strict disciplinarian and impartial superior. He always displayed great executive ability in the conduct of his precinct, being always careful to see that the law was put in letter of the law in the performance of Police duties. Earnest in the discharge of his own duties, he always exacted strict attention and discipline from his subordinates, though his general disposition and readiness to appreciate faithful service of any needed him a favorite with his men, and created for him a host of friends in all classes of society.

When the present system of Police was perfected, Mr. JOURDAN came naturally into the great work as an available candidate for the position of Superintendent, vacated by Mr. EDWARD KENDIGH, resigned, and he was duly appointed to that arduous and responsible post by an unanimous vote of the Board. His record as Chief Executive of the Department is an excellent one, though his ambition to repress existing evils in the Department led him to overtask his strength, and the occurrence of the Mathews murder greatly added to his anxiety and work. For nearly an entire month after that terribly-mysterious crime Mr. JOURDAN scarcely slept or rested, in his extraordinary efforts to secure an elucidation of the mystery that yet surrounds that assassination. This, added to the great strain on his mental faculties, brought on a severe prostration, and he was compelled to desist and place himself under the care of physicians. Even then he persisted in keeping cognizance of the business of the Department, and it was only within a week that he failed to leave his house for his office-chair. In his death the Department will lose a valuable executive head, who cannot be easily replaced.

The Stoning of a School-Teacher in Massachusetts—Further Particulars.

The Boston Traveller of the 8th inst., gives the following additional particulars of the stoning of Miss ETTA K. BARSTOW, at Canton, Norfolk County, Mass.:

"It appears that the school in the Pleasant-street District, No. 4, has been hard to manage, and that the previous teacher, a robust woman, carried on the school with a measure of success. This year it is up on account of the small remuneration, or for some other good reason. Miss BARSTOW, ambitious to teach, although out of health, and hardly fitted, physically, for the place, undertook to teach the school. Everything passed off very well until last Wednesday, when, at the noon recess, Miss BARSTOW 'rung in' the scholars, but some of them refused to return to the school-room. She then shut out the delinquents, who immediately commenced to throw stones at the windows. When the dinner-hour arrived, Miss BARSTOW started for her boarding-house; and while on her way there, four boys, named respectively JOHN COYNE, eleven years of age; JAMES COGSWELL, thirteen; DANIEL KELIHER, nine, and JEREMIAH KEEHER, eleven, brothers, commenced to stone her. One of the missiles, the size of a common inkstand, hit the teacher on the neck just below the ear, and another stone struck her on the back, which caused her to stagger, when the rascals declared that she was drunk. The poor girl finally managed to get to the house, and throw herself on a lounge, remarking to Mrs. BATES, 'Those awful boys have been stoning me.' After a short nap, the injured teacher ate a hearty meal, and then went to sleep again. On waking, she remarked to Mrs. BATES that she 'should not teach school this afternoon.' The lady of the house now felt serious at the condition of the teacher, and discovered that her limbs were very weak, and that she could hardly help herself. Finally Miss BARSTOW started for the train to go to Boston, and it was with a great effort that she reached the cars, having required the assistance of a lady friend

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The only sale which took place on Saturday (Oct. 8) was that at Rye, in Westchester County, of property belonging to J. M. HALSTED, Esq., under the direction of DEGEN, KETCHAM & CO. The auction was comparatively well attended, and considerable interest was manifested by those present. Fifty-eight lots in all were disposed of, at an average price of from $200 to $300 per lot. These were small lots, the villa plots not being offered. The result of the transaction was satisfactory to all concerned.

During the past week the real estate market has been distinguished by an increased activity in business. In nearly every branch an improvement is manifest. Public sales have taken place at the Exchange during four days of the week and the attendance at the auction rooms has been large. In private transactions the transfer record of the week shows a large increase in the valuation of property conveyed. The value of City property sold at the Exchange during the week amounts in the aggregate to $618,000, a decided improvement. The largest transactions were made on Thursday and Friday, and in both instances by the auction firm of ROBERTS & MCGUIRE. On the first-named day the Greenwich Steam Flouring Mills property, located on Greenwich and Washington streets respectively, was disposed of, and on Friday the property included in the assets of A. M. BINDNER & CO., situated on Liberty and on Thames streets. The premises sold, located on the latter street, were, by a typographical error, reported on Saturday, as on Thomas-street. In other respects, the description given was correct. Most of the sales that have taken place were of a local character, but little property being voluntarily offered. The prices received, however, have been fair, and if maintained, other property will probably soon be brought forward. In addition to the sales of City property at the Exchange on the days named, MULLER, WILKINS & CO. sold, on Tuesday, a house and lot on Adelphi-street, in Brooklyn, at a fair price. Full reports of all the transactions made, have appeared from day to day in this column.

The transfer record of the week, as has been said, shows a decided increase over that of the previous week, particularly as far as related to New-York property, the value in which exceeds nearly $1,000,000. In regard to Brooklyn property, although the number of transfers is largely increased, the value represented is about the same. The figures for the week ending and including Friday, Sept. 30, are as follows: Number of New-York transfers, 93; value of property, $1,126,425. Number of Brooklyn transfers, 147; value of property, $355,514. The following is the table for the past week, ending Friday, Oct. 8:

	No. Transfers, New-York.	Value.	No. Transfers, Brooklyn.	Value.
Saturday, Oct. 1	13	$[illegible]	11	$[illegible]
Monday, Oct. 3	22	520,740	30	277,310
Tuesday, Oct. 4	20	474,459	31	119,095
Wednesday, Oct. 5	25	352,095	35	122,845
Thursday, Oct. 6	32	1,021,225	37	185,000
Friday, Oct. 7	21	351,205	14	90,350
Total	133	$2,517,700	158	$[illegible]

In reference to suburban sales, that of DEGEN, KETCHAM & CO., on Saturday, has already been referred to. The only other of note which occurred during the week was under the direction of A. D. MELLICK, JR., & BROTHER, and took place at Scotch Plains, N. J., a flourishing village on the line of the Central Railway. The attendance at this sale was good, notwithstanding the unpropitious weather, and some 150 lots were sold. The average price obtained per lot was $123, a sum sufficient to pay a handsome profit on the original investment. Another of these sales, possibly two, will be held during the Fall, of which due notice will be given.

The prospect for an active market during the present week is more than fair, as already an unusual number of sales are projected. The principal transactions to take place are as follows:

At the Exchange, to-morrow, E. H. LUDLOW & CO. will offer some desirable City lots, located on One Hundred and Fifty-fifth and One Hundred and Fifty-sixth streets, respectively, near the Grand Boulevard. Also some valuable property on Canal-street.

ROBERTS & MCGUIRE have bulletined for the same day, some fifteen lots located on Sixty-ninth and Sixty-ninth streets, between Eighth and Ninth avenues, and five lots on Ninth-avenue, in the same vicinity.

At the Exchange, in this City, also to-morrow, WYCKOFF & LITTLE, the well known Brooklyn auctioneers, will sell a number of desirable building lots on Broadway, in the Eighteenth Ward of the latter city, while A. D. MELLICK, JR., & BRO., at the same place, will offer four residences, eligibly situated at Montclair, N. J. These houses are all within half a mile of the railway station, said to be well built, and each surrounded with sufficient land to make them desirable.

On Wednesday, at the Exchange, the lease of the Gleniana Hotel, in Fifth-avenue, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second streets, will be disposed of by ROBERTS & MCGUIRE. Already hitherto postponed several times, the sale of these premises on Wednesday may be considered tolerably certain. Improved property on One Hundred and Thirty-second-street, between Fifth and Madison avenues, and on Third-avenue, between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets, is bulletined for sale, also, on Wednesday, by WM. KENNELLY. On Thursday and Friday, sales will also take place, particulars of which transactions will be daily made public.

With the above prospect for business at the Exchange, the market in suburban sales will also be marked by more activity. To-morrow, (Tuesday,) at 1 P. M., on the premises, LAWRENCE, OAKLEY & FLEURY will sell a first-class residence and 150 building lots, each 25x100, located midway between Roselle and West Elizabeth stations, on the New-Jersey Central Railway. All the lots are located in a healthy district, only fourteen miles distant from this City, and have been secured at such figures that they can be sold on the most reasonable terms to those desiring a home in this vicinity. The sale should command the attention of investors in suburban property. Maps, photographs and full particulars can be obtained of the auctioneers, No. 111 Pine-street, and also tickets for a special excursion train, which will leave the foot of Liberty-street to-morrow at 12½ P. M.

To-morrow (Tuesday) also a most important sale will be held at Bayonne, N. J., consisting of 200 choice lots, opposite the City Hall, and centre of that City; also a valuable water front on Newark Bay. The sale will take place at 1 o'clock on the ground, and will be under the direction of LEWIS E. WOOD, auctioneer. Bayonne is within twenty-five minutes of New-York, easy of access, and rapidly growing in population. For this sale a special train will leave the foot of Liberty-street at 10:40 A. M., for which tickets can be had on application to the auctioneer, No. 30 Montgomery-street, Jersey City, or to Wm. HARRIMAN, No. 200 Washington Market, corner West and Fulton streets, in this City.

On Wednesday, should the weather prove fair, on the premises, at 1 P. M., JOHNSON & MILLER will sell thirty acres of land, divided into several building sites, located at New-Dorp, Staten Island. The property is within an hour of the City, located on high ground, and possessing other manifest advantages. The sale will be absolute, and without reserve. The same firm will also, at the same time and place, dispose of the country seat formerly belonging to C. A. MESSNER, deceased. The property comprises a large mansion, and seventy acres of land in high cultivation, together with the usual all the necessary outbuildings. The premises will be subdivided into four sections and sold separately. The dwelling is a modern one, and located in a first-class neighborhood. Free tickets for the sale can be procured of the auctioneers, No. 187 Newark-street and No. 187 Montague-street, Brooklyn. On the day of sale a special train will connect with the 11 o'clock ferry-boat from the foot of Whitehall-street.

On Saturday, two important sales of country property will be made, one by A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO., at Pelham, in Westchester County, and the other by Messrs. LAWRENCE, OAKLEY & DOBBS, at Dobb's Ferry, on the Hudson. To both of these sales more extended reference will be made as the auction day approaches.

The Linden Park enterprise still continues to attract purchasers, and up to the present time nearly 700 lots have been disposed of, 175 being sold during the month of September alone. During the present week free excursions will be made to this property each day, tickets for which will be furnished to any who may desire to visit the ground, at the office of the Association, No. 37 Park-row.

There is every indication that during the present month and throughout November, business will be moderate, as there is already considerable inquiry for City houses. This month, and the early part of November, will finish up the auction sales of suburban property, after which auctioneers and others interested in real estate, can concentrate their energies on property on the island. To this end several important sales are already projected for next month, among which may be mentioned that another section of the Dyckman estate of forty acres will be subdivided into lots and sold at the Exchange.

WM. H. RAYNOR reports having recently disposed of the following property at private sale: Three lots on the north side of Eighty-fifth-street, 150 feet east of Fifth-avenue, 75x100, each for $26,500. Also, two lots on the north-west corner of Madison-avenue and One Hundred and Fourteenth-street, 100 feet on Madison-avenue and 50 feet on One Hundred and Fourteenth-street; one lot corner Madison-avenue and One Hundred and Fifteenth-street, 25 feet on avenue and 75 feet on street; and two lots south side One Hundred and Fifteenth-street, 75 feet west of Madison-avenue, full lots, for $17,000.

RELIGIOUS.

THE LATE THEODORE B. STOUT.

Commemorative Services at St. Luke's Methodist Episcopal Church—Addresses of Rev. J. H. Wakeley, Rev. R. S. Foster, D. D., and Others.

Yesterday morning, at St. Luke's Methodist Episcopal Church, in West Forty-first-street, services were held commemorative of the late THEODORE B. STOUT, son of Mr. A. V. STOUT, President of the Shoe and Leather Bank of this City. Young Mr. STOUT died on the 12th of August last, at Madison, N. J., after a brief illness, aged thirty-one years.

After the usual preliminary services, Rev. Mr. BRUDLEY, of Brooklyn, made a few remarks, in which he spoke of the departed friend and brother as a pure-hearted, energetic young Christian, and whether in his relations to the Church, or in the more complex and varied departments of every day life, he never shirked responsibility, never hesitated to go forward in a good cause, and was never backward or lukewarm in action.

Rev. J. H. WAKELEY spoke in regard to his traits of character at some length. He was the child of a lover of the Church and of the Sabbath-school. The latter he was Superintendent of at the time of his death. He had worked industriously and effectively for the formation and building-up of the infant church in Forty-first-street. He knew the young man whom he, the speaker, was pastor of a church in Yonkers. After his duties called him to another field of labor, Mr. STOUT was mainly instrumental in securing the passage of some resolutions, which were afterward neatly engrossed, framed and sent to him at Poughkeepsie, expressive of the high estimation in which the young man's Church held their former pastor. These resolutions he kept hanging in his parlor, and he would cherish them as sacred keepsakes to the latest day of his existence. He had, he said, never known the deceased to do a mean act. He was a young man, with moral principles, that he kept sacred and pure to himself. Him never to do a low, a mean, a small, or a dishonest thing. His Rev. Mr. BRUDLEY had just remarked, he was a young man of great business tact and ability. His promptness, punctuality and order were most remarkable. He was not old until he was ripe for his Maker to set his house in order. His whole life was one constant and ceaseless preparation for the great hereafter. He carried his religion into his business. The speaker had seldom known one whose business and religion seemed so to overlap the one the other as did this. Referring to the financial crisis which swept over this City something over a year ago, when in a single day gold went down from 40 to about 30, he said he met his young friend THEODORE, (I always called him THEODORE, said he,) and said to him, "Are you coming out of this fiery furnace with out even your hair?" The young man grasped his hand with that hearty and cordial manner which was his wont, and replied, "I have been praying in regard to it, and it is my conviction that I shall come out all right." The result showed that he did come out of the terrible financial storm, and that he was almost the only one wrecked, unscathed, both in purse and honor. Only think of it, said Mr. WAKELEY, prayer in Wall and Broad streets; prayer amidst bankers' golden bags, and where the railway and other stocks of the world are daily bought and sold. Whatever of a similar character the deceased was interested in, the Company failed, and he went down with it. But he recovered, and every dollar due was afterward paid to the creditors. Truly it had been said, "An honest man is the noblest work of God." Such a man was the dear friend and brother whose untimely death they today commemorated. He belonged to the royal family of man. Honorable, honest and upright in all his dealing, he was princely, he was noble—he belonged to God's nobility. He did not make money for the sake of hoarding it, but he acted as if he had taken to heart the injunction of his Saviour's, "Occupy till I come," were constantly sounding in his ears. Many and many young men had helped on to business, and his heart and his purse were ever open to the cry of the needy, to the cause of charity, and the demands of missionary work. He not only aided with his purse as God had prospered him, but he worked in the cause of Christ with his hands, his heart, and his brains. On, said the speaker, he was one of the most noble, generous, princely young men that the sun ever shone upon. He has gone to receive the reward of his labors and to receive the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Rev. R. S. FOSTER, D. D., made the closing remarks. He had, he said, become acquainted with their deceased brother, during the time the efforts to establish that church in Forty-first-street commenced. Then it was that he learned to love him, as every one did whom anywhere he was to know him. His kind, genial, social, warm-hearted manners won the hearts of all. His secular and religious life intermingled, and ran the one into the other—as much so as with any one he ever knew. It was a remarkable characteristic of his that he carried his religion wherever he went. Of very few men in Wall and Broad streets could this remark be truthfully made. Every business man who had dealings with him must have known that he was a Christian. They not only knew him as an active, energetic, thrifty business man, but they know him as a Christian man. There was no question in his mind, he said, but that the men of Wall and Broad streets, when they heard of his premature death, sadly and sincerely lamented. His was a spirit sanctified in the highest and best sense of that word. His desire was to be working as a Christian man. He did not need to be pushed into duty, or to be goaded into enterprise. He constantly sought opportunities for manifesting his zeal. He initiated so many matters that he could have reposed on a bed of down, but he came there and worked for that infant church with a will and a zeal worthy of the cause and of himself. He came there with his gladsome, cheering face, his ready hand, his liberal purse and his warm, Christ-like heart, and he labored diligently and successfully, always ready to stand in the fore front and bear the burden and heat of the day. But, though he rests from his labors on earth, his works yet speak.

THE METHODIST FUND.

Its Astonishing Success—How Two Millions Became Eight and a Half Millions—Hints to Presbyterians.

"We went up to the Methodist Book Concern, the other day," says the editor of the New-York Evangelist of last week, "to learn some secrets of the well-known success in the great centenary effort of 1866. The denomination had not been counted wealthy, and two millions was considered a large sum to be raised for religious uses.

Doubtless many shook their heads, and positively there were croakers in the camp who had nothing but wet blankets to contribute; still the movement soon became general, and the most faithless were won over. More than four times the amount originally named was finally realized. How was it done?

1. A grand impulse was given to the work by a popular meeting held in New-York City. Success seemed assured from that hour. The zeal there manifested became contagious. Other cities and villages took up the work, nor did they merely talk and pass resolutions and appoint committees. The Methodist brethren know how to follow a word with a blow. Whoever knew them to talk and vote on any such matter without actually setting to work? Nowhere else but The New-York meeting insured success because it established a proper scale of subscriptions. It demonstrated the fact that the work to be done had been rightly measured, and that any common scale of contributing was to be thought little. Large donations amounting to hundreds and thousands became the order of the day throughout the Church.

2. The Methodists soon found what every denomination attempting to raise a great fund is sure to find, viz.: that in so vast an effort, a wide scope of objects must be allowed; and great freedom of choice must be given, if the spontaneous, prayerful and joyful enthusiasm of the people is to be called forth. However perfect the theory and plan which may be formed, it will not pulled and stretched into elasticity, and possibly into nothought of distension, ere it can be made to fit the vast and varied exigencies of such a movement.

The great rains which God sends upon the mountains and the valleys cannot confine their waters to one or two conduits, they "water the land, making it soft with showers." They drop upon the pastures of the wilderness, and the little hills (as well as the greater ones) rejoice on every side." So the Centenary Fund, while rearing a sufficient number of great monuments like the Drew Seminary, realized its greatest usefulness in a diffused application to the varied wants and interests of the denomination, and the grandest monument of the effort is the Methodist Church itself, strengthened and invigorated in every department, raised to a higher estimate of its own power for present or future usefulness, and feeling full the impulse of a work in which all are proud to have shared.

3. The success of the movement was largely due to that admirable system of the Methodist Church which calls into action the real and earnest work of every pastor. That Church, like the nation for which NELSON fought, "expects every man to do his duty." The Methodist pastor, we should have proved himself indifferent and remiss (we are not informed whether there actually was any such case of the kind) would have been regarded as a grievous cumberer of good productive ground, and would doubtless have had the curse of Meroz pointedly read to him for not coming up to the help of the Lord. It is to this that what the Methodist Church accomplishes in this respect is not to be expected among Presbyterian pastors. But why not? It would be difficult to assign any reason which our ministry would be willing to acknowledge as correct. It must be confessed that the real strength of the Presbyterian Church has never been called forth simply because a general movement has never been attained in any great work. Only a part of the churches have ever yet contributed for any object. Is this the time to inaugurate a universal contribution to show what can be done where every pastor and every session and every church shall join in the effort? The permanent effect of such a beginning would be of great value to the Church.

4. Our Methodist churches used every means to create and keep up a common enthusiasm.

Let us not be afraid of a little Methodist enthusiasm. Our steady-going Presbyterianism will bear the experiment for this once at least. Let us have popular meetings where several churches in the same Presbyterian unite. Let an interest the community about us, and to a judicious extent call in the aid of the local press. May not a social element be introduced into the work, and the co-operation of the ladies, young and old, be secured. Every Sabbath-school child should have a 25 certificate, his own effort being supplemented by the help of others.

Let it be remembered—for, according to Paul, emulation is a worthy motive—that the Methodists voted $2,000,000, and in little more than a year more than quadrupled the amount. Let it also be borne in mind, that the Universal Church in our country, having voted to celebrate this, their centenary year, by a thank-offering of $1,000,000, have recently reported one, as already secured, with three months more to work.

The next to report will be our Congregational brethren, with their $2,000,000 for church building, debt cancelling, endowments and the Great House of Boston. We expect to hear something equally favorable from them.

But how with the somewhat boasted wealth and strength of our United Presbyterianism in May next? It has been up to the house-tops on two grand occasions, and solemnly recorded and publicly announced that we resolve to give unto God a thank-offering of $5,000,000. If this was done at first on impulse, it was done the next time calmly and deliberately, and that by a newly-chosen representation. The thousand men or more who voted on those occasions are personally pledged, and in our system is a representative system, and in our system it is a representative system, these also will want to be to legislate and to vote be bound by their action.

How, under these circumstances, can any true Presbyterian be indifferent or remiss? Our known resources are so great that no excuse will or can be allowed us.

But there are other ends, highest received in the same, greater manifestation of God's wisdom and goodness has been universally acknowledged. We have recorded our vows in the presence of angels as well as men, and there is a faith to be kept with God which no man can disregard without violence to all divine sanctions and his own conscience. Let us no longer talk of a $5,000,000 failure, but rather quietly pray and labor for a $10,000,000 success."

THE CAREER OF NAPOLEON III.

A Moral Lesson to Young Men by Rev. George H. Hepworth.

The Church of the Messiah was crowded last evening with a most intelligent congregation, drawn thither to listen to Rev. G. H. HEPWORTH, who had been advertised to speak on "The Moral Lesson of Napoleon's Career"—a lecture to young men.

The speaker began by saying that many young men, when starting out in life, took some noted character as their guide, and tried to govern themselves in accordance with what appeared to be the course of conduct pursued by this bright particular star of their imagination. Because of this he desired to call their attention to the career of the late Emperor of France, so that they might avoid the rocks upon which he was sent to destruction. Two men had of late engrossed the attention of mankind, for the reason that they were both until very recently at the head of opposing armies—the greatest ever known in Europe. King WILLIAM, of Prussia, was the one and LOUIS NAPOLEON the other. In WILLIAM we had the type of the hard-headed, Puritan and Christian, and the strongest of character and determination in the prosecution of his designs, we must respect the man, even if we do not like the thing he is doing. In the case of the other leader we had one who cares nothing for the people, but has regard only for himself, and in his condition of a prisoner is entirely apparent only for his own safety. The one man is physically a wreck, worn out through excessive debauchery; the other is older in years, gray-haired, but tough and sturdy, and as determined in pursuing his course as we might expect to find any man in the full flush of youth. We admire the sturdiness of the one, and smile in derision at the pusillanimity of the other. The one says but little, but means every word he says, and more. The other talks all the time, and means nothing. The speaker then gave a summary of history of the condition of France previous to the second Napoleon's accession. For the purpose of showing how low the people of that country had fallen. All knew the standard of morality in the Court of France under LOUIS XIV., XV., and XVI. Atheism was everywhere prevalent throughout the Empire. Bad women were in the highest places; bad men were to office, and bad people everywhere. The poorer classes had become utterly depraved; they were nothing more than a band of brigands, a horde of bandits. They cried out alternately for bread and for blood, and seemingly cared but little which was given them. Their higher pleasure was found in witnessing the horrible sight of the guillotine, as the heads of the aristocracy were, one after the other, severed from their bodies. It was at this juncture of affairs that the Empress JOSEPHINE begged her daughter, the mother of LOUIS NAPOLEON, to marry Bonaparte, she did not love. This was a matter that she might not turn her back upon. The success of a dynasty might be bound up in it, and, with tears in her eyes, she, with averted head, gave her hand in marriage to the man who had no place in her heart. Calamity soon afterward was busy in clouding her character, and her life was made wretched. Her children were brought up in this atmosphere, and this may be and somewhat in excuse for the severity with which the career of NAPOLEON may be criticised.

In looking critically at the life of NAPOLEON III., we should be noticed the almost conspicuous absence of any lofty plan or purpose in his career. CESSAR, CHARLEMAGNE and the first NAPOLEON swept over the world like fire over a field of stubble, but there was a hard-smitten purpose in the life of each of them. LOUIS NAPOLEON cannot be compared with either of them; he can be compared only with himself. The speaker would not dare to speak of him in the same breath with WASHINGTON. Our own beloved leader unsheathed his sword only when his country commanded the act, and as the earliest possible moment when the interest of his country permitted, he returned to the peaceful, hard, and thanked God for the opportunity so to do. In the case of LOUIS NAPOLEON we see nothing of this character. He appears to us simply as an adventurer, and will be so regarded by the historian fifty years hence. Hear him tell a boyish story! All remember when words from across the ocean struck our ear, that the world had become tired of imperialism; and these words were spoken by the man whose life the speaker was considering. Their author told the people of France that, guided by the star of manifest destiny, he would assume, with their consent, the sceptre of the Empire, and that he would be to them a father, and they would be his children. When he got power into his own hands, however, we found that those brave words were nothing more than pinchbeck rhetoric—used for the purpose of smoothing down the difficulties in the way of his ascent to the throne. When firmly seated on the throne he resorted to trickery. He plotted an attempted assassination against himself—absolutely hired a poor man to seemingly attempt his death—to shoot at, but not to hit him. A new furor was by this means created in France. Comments were made on this attempted assassination; the sacred person of the Emperor had been assailed; and the volatile people of France threw up their hats, and declared that there must be some truth in the idea of manifest destiny which this adventurer had connected with his name; and thus he fanned himself into a blaze of popular enthusiasm, and made himself more secure in his imperial position.

In the second place, we are struck with the supreme selfishness that characterizes all the acts of the late Emperor. He drew upon the name of the first NAPOLEON to supply what was wanting in himself. He was continually speaking of "my uncle and myself," and interpreted his writings plentifully with capital letters whenever he used the word "me." He resorted to deception when he went among the workmen of France, and talked with them in the workshops concerning the past of France, and the future of France. But this seeming condescension was only for the purpose of gaining votes for himself. It was a trick worthy only of a Ward politician in New-York. When, however, he secured imperial power, he cared no more for the working classes. There was a time in France when the humblest peasant in the nation might stand before the President and demand a reason for his course of political action. When Presidential prerogatives were exchanged for Imperial ones, that privilege was attacked. The Emperor was at home to everybody; the Emperor was never at home to anybody.

The speaker then accused NAPOLEON of being a hypocrite in religion; he put on the cloak of religion only to further his ambitious designs. He needed the Pope's influence, and the Pope needed his bayonets; so he fanned the old man into giving him his Papal blessing, which he received with hypocritical meekness. Then, when communion was created in France, and discontent became manifested against the imperial acts, NAPOLEON proclaimed universal suffrage, and expressed his readiness to abide by the decision of the people. But he flooded the country with those influences that give direction to votes. He scattered busts and pictures of himself throughout the Empire, so that the humblest peasant might become familiar with his personal appearance; he sent out swarms of agents who carried his photographs among the simple peasantry; he bought the Catholic priesthood, and their whispered influence in the confessional was to the effect that the best interests of the country depended on sustaining in power and endorsing the acts of the "man of Fate." These agents whom he sent out he rewarded with place and power, because he was compelled to do so. But the last benefit he gave him, after robbing the nation, and plunging him, unprepared, into a war which has caused his downfall. In doing this, they only followed out what they learned from him. He was an adventurer in America, a vagabond in England, the President of the Republic, and Emperor of France; but in any or all of these conditions he was a hypocrite—he never kept his word when given, to either friend or foe.

The speaker, after referring to the persecution of the Press in France, closed by saying that NAPOLEON had fairly dropped out of power, humbled from his throne, because of his corruption. The lesson of his career and downfall should be taken to heart by every young man. There was only one motto that was sure to lead to permanent success in life. That motto was given to LOUIS NAPOLEON by his own father, the King of Holland, but he failed to observe it; it was and which every man should engrave on his heart—simply this: "Do right, come what may."

Courtship—The Principles Which Should Govern the Ladies—Sermon by Rev. J. T. Kennedy.

Rev. J. T. KENNEDY discoursed last evening, on "Courtship and the principles which should govern the ladies," at the Methodist Church, Grand-street, Brooklyn, before a large audience, chiefly composed of young men and women. The reverend gentleman proceeded to observe that, when commencing courtship, it was highly important to determine on some fixed principles to regulate a person's conduct. In courtship, as in all the great concerns of life, the necessity of such principles was apparent, and without their employment it could not be conducted to a proper issue. They should be adopted at the very beginning of the business, and no man or woman with a due regard to their and his own happiness in the future, should enter upon such perilous pursuits without them, for on their action in that regard depended the peace and love of connubial life. Failing to realize the great necessity for their adoption, or ignorant of the means for their attainment, of unhappy lives, thousands annually contract matrimony and fall victims to the lust and passions of each other, lamenting in vain that they did not adhere to some of the great and leading principles of morality and religion. There were some principles peculiar to the female, and, as to the former, with the former, modesty and reserve should be manifest in her deportment. Whatever might be the character of her lover, with the trait in her character he would be always pleased, and all advances and discoveries of affection should be invariably proceed from him. No expression should ever be made in words or conduct that would lead to the suspicion that there was an anxiety on her part to make a conquest of even the man to whom she entertained a growing respect and confidence. This would cause her to lose his interest, and subtract from her one of those charms which never fail to fan and increase the desire on his part to make her his own. He cautioned woman against all duplicity and everything that tended to give her the reputation of a coquette. Hold no admirer in miserable suspense if you don't want him, he said, but treat him honorably and kindly. Do not keep him in anxiety to let him know your sentiments in his regard. There was scarcely a person that could love for any time without some distant hope of success. If she wished to undeceive a lover she could do it in a variety of ways. There was a certain species of cool familiarity which would instantly and in a sensible manner that his attentions were not reciprocated. Actions in many instances spoke louder than words. But to encourage an affection which could not be reciprocated was a species of barbarism as cruel as it was unjust. The reverend gentleman adverted at length to the prudence and caution to be exercised in the selection of a husband, remarking that the choice should fall on one distinguished for his mental qualifications rather than his personal attractions, and should not be influenced by a hope of gain. He advised them not to marry a fop, a spendthrift, a mauvaise person of little or no mind, but a person who might have qualifications of a commendable nature, these qualities ultimately uprooted them, and resulted in ruin and misery, perhaps shame and degradation. Particularly he cautioned them against drunkenness. So prolific a source of misery for ages past,—that crime had plunged thousands into a state of hopeless bereavement and paralyzed the energies of its people. In the great work of temperance reform the ladies could exercise a wonderful influence and bid humanity arise and go forth with a grandeur and power unknown to the nation. He counselled the consideration of the arguments of advocates of woman's rights, as to them it would be productive of more beneficial results to womanhood and the nation than might else beside.

Swedenborg—Second Coming of Christ.

The first of a series of religious lectures was given last evening at Steinway Hall, by Rev. CHAUNCEY GILES, pastor of the Thirty-fifth-street New Church Society. The audience was large, and evidently of more than ordinary intelligence. Lawyers and doctors, Ex-Judges, experimenters in religious theories, scarchers after truth, original thinkers, with contracted brow and dimly-lighted eyes, newspaper men and devotees of literature "nestled o'er with the pale nest of thought," merchants and bankers, the aged and adult, young men disposed to follow the injunctions of St. Paul, to "try all things and hold fast to that which is good," the fair and fashionable, were all represented. The services were of the usual kind, the congregation joining in repeating the Lord's Prayer, and in the singing, small books with the music on the same page with the hymn having been distributed among them. The subject for the evening was the "Second Coming of Christ." The lecturer labored to show that nearly all the primitive doctrines of the Church were given up one by one, and a more rational and spiritual interpretation given to the Scriptures. The doctrine of a material hell, the vicarious atonement, and the second coming of Christ in a bodily shape, had now become very generally obsolete. He went on to argue that the craving of the human soul was for a higher spiritual instruction, and that in this spiritual sense was the second coming of Christ foretold. Tracts explaining and sustaining the truth of the doctrines of the New Church were freely distributed among the audience, and it was announced that the lectures would be continued for some time to come on each Sunday evening.

Sermon by Bishop Talbot.

A large number of worshipers attended St. Luke's Episcopal Church, in Hudson-street, last evening, on the occasion of the delivery of a sermon by Bishop TALBOT, of Indiana. He selected the forty-sixth verse of the nineteenth chapter of St. Luke, "My house is a house of prayer," and proceeded to show that the Church was solely a place of worship, and was not intended for sermons of the declamatory or sensational order.

JEROME PARK.

The Fall Meeting—The Course on Saturday.

The Fall meeting at Jerome Park has so far been a most decided success. The weather has been auspicious, and a brighter or more charming day than Saturday, the second day of the meeting, could not have been desired. The Jockey Club had charge of the weather as well as of the race-course. Saturday is always a favorite day for patrons of the race-course, and surely last Saturday was no exception. Fourteen cars of the Harlem Railroad were insufficient to accommodate the crowds that left the City for Jerome Park, and to these must be added the immense number rich enough and aristocratic enough to ride in their own vehicles. The Park is so large and the stands so capacious that a few hundred spectators may be scattered around without attracting notice. On Saturday, however, the first and second stands, large as they are, were filled to overflowing, while the space in front of the quarter-stretch was thronged with well-dressed gentlemen during the whole day.

Since last meeting the Jockey Club has wisely determined to throw the Club stand open to the public. Hitherto it has been reserved for the use of members. It possesses no advantages over any of the other stands. Indeed, the view from it is not quite as good as that from the stand on the left; but, because it was set apart, it was the exclusive use of members of the Club and their families, the entree to it was regarded by the public as something to be especially desired. During this meeting it has been free to all having grand-stand tickets, and the privilege has certainly not been abused.

As the bell rang for the first race on Saturday, the grand stands presented a most brilliant appearance. The exquisite toilets of the ladies and children, and of the latter there were not a few, were enough to advance by the combined consciousness of their escorts. On the club-house piazzas, too, were other groups, who preferred to watch the struggle from that point of vantage. At the last moment, however, not a few of these, doubtful of being able to obtain a good view there, migrated hastily across the course to the grand stand. As the horses were brought up to the starting point the ladies, quite as eager as the gentlemen, rose from their seats and with jeweled opera glasses scanned each steed and rider as they took their respective places. The flag falls, they are off, the opera-glasses follow them round the course. "The red's first;" "I'm sure the green will win;" "A pair of gloves the blue comes in first," are the exclamations falling from dainty lips as each fleet comer spurns the dust behind him. The race is over; the ladies breath again and are seated. The gloves are lost and won. The gentlemen who have been betting something more costly than gloves, adjust their differences, and wait patiently for the next race. But like all earthly things races must have an end. Those at Jerome Park are usually over in good time. As the last horse in the last race comes in there is a scramble, and a rush for the doors of exit. Those who have come by the Harlem train make the best of their way to it through pleasant lanes and woods. The owners of vehicles make a rush for their conveyances. The Club members and their friends and families trip across the course to the Club-house and their dinners. As the shades of evening fall, the more aristocratic vehicles are brought out. Here are Mr. FELLOWES' four bright bays, worth a small fortune; Mr. HELMBOLD's handsome drag, Mr. BELMONT's, Mr. HUNTER's, Mr. DUNCAN's, Mr. LEONARD JEROME's, Mr. STUYVESANT's, Count CROUX's, and others follow, and as night falls Jerome Park, with its noble Club-house, race stands and miles of stabling is as silent and deserted as the age it had never known the thousands that have but recently departed. The races hereafter during the present meeting will commence at 2 P. M. instead of 1 P. M.

Bible Mission in the Church of the Church of Gustavus Adolphus.

In the unpretending but commodious Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Church of Gustavus Adolphus, in Twenty-second-street, near Third-Avenue—the only established church of the Swedes in this City—the services, yesterday morning, were connected with a mission, according to the beautiful and impressive ritual of the Swedish Lutheran Church. The pastor, Rev. AXEL WARSTEDT, preached a very impressive sermon from Mark vii., 1-24 verse, taking for his subject, "The hypocrisy of the human heart and the healing thereof." Among the large congregation was Miss. NILSSON, who sang with the choir the beautiful Swedish hymns, and extended the imposing after-service, which was concluded by Miss. NILSSON's singing the anthem, the congregation joining in the last verse. At the conclusion of the service, the distinguished singer took the chair, and, with her own hand, and promised a large sum toward paying off the heavy debt on this church, against which the pastor and his poor but respectable congregation have struggled since the purchase of their house of worship, two years ago.

DAVID STANTON, of No. 30 Third-street, penman, has just completed a set of resolutions, to be presented to S. S. RANDALL by the Board of Education on his retirement from office. This artistic piece of penmanship is worth seeing. It is in a large handsome frame, with open panels at the side and at the base. The piece is well conceived and beautifully arranged, with a fine picture of S. S. RANDALL in the centre. On each side is a highly finished India-ink drawing, representing respectively Literature and Science. Literature stands with a scroll in her hand, looking up to the Genius of Science, who, with divine grace is seen with a globe in one hand and in the other holds a plumb-line, measuring the depths of the ocean. At the bottom is a fine India-ink drawing of the building of the Board of Education, in Elm street. Daniel Daly, who was evidently laboring under the combined influences of excitement and drink, rushed out and told him "to come on if it was fighting he wanted," at the same time drawing a pistol and firing two shots at COLLINS, neither of which, fortunately, touched him.
